TOLEDO COMPUTING SCALES

Automatic but Springless.

The "Toledo" is a money saver because it positively stops the giving of overweight.

A time saver because it is Automatic.

A labor saver because there are no weights to lift, no poises to slide, or prices to set.

A trade bringer because it indicates to the customer in plain figures the correct weight of the article he is buying.

It is honest both to the merchant and customer.

The Toledo system costs you nothing because it is paid for with the money you are now losing.

By H. L. C. Hall

This book is a new departure in the way of a book on "cost accounting." In it you will find treated the principles of the science instead of a description of what some one else has done. Other people's systems do not interest you unless you can apply them to your own uses, hence only those which can be applied to your own needs are touched upon.

The Buyer, The Manager, The Superintendent, The Book-keeper, The Secretary, The Sales Agent and all those interested in knowing "what it costs" should secure a copy. Send for circular

FRESH AND CURED FISH

SALMON SPAWNING.

THE B. C. Fishery Commissioner has just returned from a partial inspection of the spawning grounds of the Fraser River, and his report is most interesting. He estimates that fully 200,000 sockeyes passed through the weirs at Seton Lake, a great number of which were allowed to pass into the lake for natural spawning, the balance being retained, and when ripe the ova will be taken and placed in the Seton Lake hatchery. He also states that the Horsefly River was swarming with breeding sockeye. He was not able to visit all the spawning grounds but his information is that the fish this year are everywhere abundant.

The commissioner places great importance on the spawning grounds, as he considers that on these the runs of future years depend.

Mr. R. J. Ker, secretary of the British Columbia Packers' Association, is of opinion that the real salvation of the salmon fishing industry depends on the establishment of periodical close seasons. The Canadian Order-in-Council which precludes them from being caught in the Fraser River and adjacent waters during 1906 and 1908 is still in force. It is, however, provided that the order should be cancelled in the event of Washington not passing a similar enactment for the United States fisheries.

B. C. HERRING FISHERIES.

GREAT developments are expected in the herring fisheries along the British Columbia coast. Herring fishing is one of the important subjects to be dealt with by the Fishery Commission. The fishermen are endeavoring to obtain changes in the regulations which will give to the industry better facilities and increased prosperity.

Herrings are making their appearance much earlier this season than on previous occasions and operations are already in full swing.

Arrangements have been made by the Dominion Government whereby quite a number of Scotch fishermen are being brought over from Scotland with a view of introducing into Canada the same system of curing and packing which has made the Scotch fish so popular in Europe. The partial failure of the Scotch fisheries has made it possible to obtain some of the oldest and most expert men. The British Columbia fisheries are expecting great developments to arise from this move of the Government.

B. C. OYSTER CULTURE.

Great developments may be expected in oyster culture in British Columbia waters if the reports which reach us are reliable, which they have every appearance of being.

We are told that at a less distance than 200 miles north of Vancouver are to be found some admirable oyster beds. A few months ago some beds were staked out as an experiment and the results have been eminently satisfactory. The water at this spot is warmer than is usually the case in the locality, and is so situated that protection can be provided with very little expense.

The oysters are said to have flourished remarkably and the early samples are considered equal to any best oyster marketed. There are upwards of 300 acres of beds already located.

GEORGIAN BAY COMMISSION.

SOME interesting facts came to light at the sitting of the Fishery Commission in Georgian Bay district. Those who gave evidence were unanimous in their opinion that there should be no curtailment of the close season; they advocated also great strictness in the enforcement of the fishing regulations, and also that hatcheries should be established by the Government.

A retired fisherman in his evidence stated that he had fished at all points on the shores of the Georgian Bay and that in his early days he had caught some twenty-two thousand fish in a season. He said it was impossible to catch that number at the present time, no doubt partly due to the increased number of fishermen, but mainly to the fact that quantities of fish were caught while spawning.

As a fisherman he advocated the establishment of hatcheries, but if the close season was observed the hatcheries would not be necessary. In his experience he found that gill nets were superior to pound nets. In his early fishing days a 5-inch mesh net was sufficient, but in later years owing to the depletion of the fish a smaller mesh became necessary. As a matter of fact a 5-inch mesh would be no use at all for present fishing. He also drew attention to the fact that three years ago whitefish were plentiful whereas now there were none.

Another fisherman who had had an extensive experience of the gill net and pound net further stated that in his opinion the natural hatching of fish would be more rapid and satisfactory, but in order to afford adequate protection the close season should commence about October 20th.

SCOTCH HERRING FAILURE.

The herring fisheries of Scotland are fast falling behind, owing to the persistence in continuing on old lines and methods, and the distress among the fisherfolk is most severe. Proposals for immigration to the Canadian fisheries are being encouraged wherever possible, but only with partial success. The Duchess of Sutherland is seeking to alleviate the present conditions by installing a system of carpet looms, and thus providing employment for the distressed families.

Allan Fox & Co., general merchants, Hawkshaw, N.B., have held a meeting of creditors.

CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN

Montreal, Sept. 28, 1905.

THE cheese market remains not only steady, but so very firm all through the country that it seems impossible to get prices any lower this year and to make present investments pay we must look for higher prices later on.

The statistical situation remains strong. Stocks in Canada have increased somewhat lately, but not to any great extent, however. The stocks here are very largely held for English account and our own holdings are not pressing on the market, but while higher prices in the future are confidently expected, our operators are very careful not to get too large a load to carry forward at present high prices, and, meanwhile at least, they miss no opportunity of selling if they can do so at even a small margin of profit.

It is difficult to get up enough enthusiasm to stock up with cheese at present prices, no matter how strong the situation may be from a statistical point of view. The chance of higher prices is a great uncertainty even if it is considered that the chances of a decline in prices are out of the question; and so we go on—salesmen in the country think they should get more money now for their September product, while dealers here fear they might lose money if they go on bidding higher prices at country points, and the consequence of all this is a firm and steady market with but very little change in prices.

In spite of extra feeding, the production of cheese is decreasing and this is one of the strong "bull arguments," but we do not as yet know whether and to what extent the consumption of cheese in the United Kingdom has fallen off on account of the increased cost to the consumer, and this is the cause of uncertainty and caution for our operators to go ahead and stock up with goods for the future demand.

When prices are low enough during the summer months that British retailers can afford to sell best cheese at five pence or six pence per pound, it is a fair speculation that the Fall or Autumn make of cheese will bring a good price during the following Winter months. This year our prices did not go low enough to admit the British retailer at any time to reduce his price below six pence per pound, but we must consider in connection with this that last year's stocks were nearly all consumed, and the consumption was obliged to go on the new season's make as soon as it was offered on the market. There was a strong demand in consequence and prices could not come down sufficiently to offer special inducements for speculative buying.

Against this we have a decreased production, and as the higher prices ruling this year may have been the cause of a decreased consumption, we may come out about even at the end, but the question still remains open, what will the future be regarding prices?

Butter has advanced recently, partly because the quality is now beyond question, and partly because the stocks are none too large. Butter from now on if not wanted for export will be wanted for our home consumption. September-made butter, if properly kept in cold storage, will be very desirable butter next Winter, and while present prices may be called high, the natural consumptive demand must be considered, and if stocks are less than what this demand may require, prices will be advanced in proportion.

There is no change in dairy butter. This article remains very scarce and prices are abnormally high. There is nothing in sight at present to change this condition.

LONDON PRODUCE LETTER.

By Our Own Correspondent.

IT is quite evident, if one may judge by the general opinion of British fruit importers, that the demand for Canadian apples is going to be brisk—possibly more so than usual, as there is some uneasiness felt on this market regarding supplies. The continental crops have proved to be exceedingly poor, and the domestic growth, upon which so much depends, has also proved very disappointing. It is much to be regretted that Canadian apple growers have themselves experienced a poor season, for had it been otherwise they might have been in a position to take advantage of the scarcity from other sources which is affecting this market. In view of the small crop in the Dominion, however, it appears that there is slight chance of the receipts of Canadian apples being as large as last year, and it is to be hoped that shippers will not endeavor to force prices too high. It is possible that there will be some Canadian apple exporters who will be tempted to take advantage of the fact that New England, Western New York and other United States districts will be unable to supply Britain in the usual quantities, in order to ask a stiffish price. A great deal depends upon the purchasing powers of the public, for fruit does not form nearly so important an article of diet as dairy produce, and price has far more to do with the sale of the former than with the latter class of goods.

In the matter of packing, there is little to be said that has not already been placed before the notice of those whom it concerns. In view of the fact that there has been some agitation for shipping apples in boxes, it would be as well to emphasize that the trade here does not want apples in boxes. If any man should be thinking of packing in boxes when it is in his power to do so in barrels, let him make careful investigations. Those who have been sending over apples for several seasons and know what is required here are aware that boxes are only welcome in Britain when barrels cannot be had (a thing which should never be the case in Canada), but there are some younger concerns to whom the information is worthy of note. One does not require to search very deeply for the reason why barrels are preferred. The cost of handling is considerably smaller; the packing is more reliable and secure, and protects the contents more thoroughly than do boxes from being damaged in transit; lastly, but not least, the retail man who cannot make use of barrels must be a very small man indeed.

It is a great satisfaction to notice that the Canadian Government has introduced legislation, as from the beginning of 1906, to bear upon the matter of box-packing, and Canadian packers must fully understand that the adoption of an uniform box is essential, and it is to be hoped that the rules will be rigidly enforced. It is to be noted, however, that the Act requires the boxes to be "not less" than ten inches in depth, eleven inches in width and twenty inches in length, which does not seem to make a limit to the size. A Covent Garden fruit importer, when discussing the question, remarked that "the system and style of the Californian and Oregon packers can hardly be improved upon. Unless the size of boxes is uniform, the thing will be brought to the same ridiculous end as was the case a few years ago, when box packing was greatly in vogue. Boxes arrived in all sizes and shapes—old boxes, new boxes, square and long boxes, some patent boxes, costly enough for the packing of bullion." Packers need not be reminded of the losses incurred, not to mention the loss of reputation, which can scarcely be repaired at all. Canadian apples, when packed honestly in barrels, enjoy a very high reputation.

Apropos of the association formed amongst Ontario apple growers for regulating their export trade, brokers seem to think that this is just what would be expected in a year of shortage such as this, and are in no way concerned for their own interests. They seem to regard the selling arrangements of the association, by which the products of the concerns who form the association are pooled, collected at certain centres and sold without regard to brokers or commission men, as something quite to be looked for in view of the small stocks held. "Wait," they say, "until the Ontario growers have a heavy crop of apples. Then they will be glad to use all channels possible in order to dispose of their supplies." However that may be, one thing is quite certain; if the association cannot work the new scheme successfully this season, when circumstances are in their favor, they never will. The brokers themselves are not without their power, and are not particular whether they handle Gravensteins, Baldwins or Northern Spies.

Provisions—In barrel pork and beef sales have decidedly improved, this being the season for demand. Pork has shown a steady advance for some weeks, but at present seems a little easier for some lines. Beef is practically unchanged, though firmer. Pure lard is still high, quite a little quantity of American is seen. Refined lard keeps quite low, but tending higher. In fresh beef, market is very dull this week and prices in both western and domestic stock have ruled low. Lamb still holds quite firm. Mutton dull. Veal is little seen. Pork is more freely offered and is rather lower. We quote:

HALIFAX, N. S.

The produce market is steady at present. Prices have changed little, if any, since last week's quotations, any tendency evident has been slightly downwards or rather towards easiness.

A good deal of stuff in a small way has been brought in to the city by many farmers from the country and this has had a certain effect on the market.

Butter—Is holding its own, though if anything, the feeling is much easier, and no higher prices are looked for just at present.

Eggs—The predictions that eggs would advance during the week did not come into effect. Some sales were made a week ago at 21c., but they have eased off since then and are now steady at 20c. Prince Edward Island quotes eggs at 18 3-4c. to 19c. with the market steady.

Cheese—Keeps on advancing, the factories quoting 12c.

NEW COMPANIES.

DOMINION charter has been granted to James Steller Lovell, Robert Gowans Ernest William McNeil, George Hamilton Cassels and William Francis Ralph, all of the City of Toronto, for the purpose of dealing in live stock, meat, cereals and cereal products, farm produce and all by-products thereof, the share capital to be two million dollars, divided into twenty thousand shares of one hundred dollars. The operation of the company to be carried on throughout the Dominion of Canada and elsewhere, by the name of P. Burns & Co., Limited, and the chief place of business of the said company to be at Calgary, in the Province of Alberta.

Provincial license has been granted to H. J. Heinz Co., a U. S. corporation, to manufacture pickles, condiments and other food products, provided however that the company in so doing shall not use in Ontario any larger amount of capital than the sum of $6,000.

Provincial charter has been granted to the Cash-With-Order Co. Limited, Hamilton, Ont., the share capital of the company to be $50,000, divided into one hundred shares of $100 each, the head office of the company to be at the said City of Hamilton, and the provisional directors of the company to be James William Baby, Alfred William Ecclestone and Alexander Watt.

Provincial charter has been granted to the Martin Milling Co., Limited, Ottawa, Ont., the share capital of the company to be $150,000 divided into one thousand shares of $100 each, the head office of the company to be at the said City of Ottawa, and the provisional directors of the company to be John Martin, John Felton Gilmour and Alfred Lee.

Provincial license has been granted to Huyler's, a U.S. corporation, to manufacture and sell confectionery, chocolate, coffee, carbonated beverages, and metal, wooden, or paper boxes, provided that the company shall not use in Ontario any larger amount of capital than the sum of $15,000. The company has appointed Hugh Edward Rose, Toronto, Ont., to be its attorney.

Provincial charter has been granted to the Darch & Hunter Seed Co., Limited, London, Ont., the share capital of the company to be $40,000 divided into four thousand shares of ten dollars each, the head office of the company to be at London, Ont., and the provincial directors of the company to be Frederick James Darch, John Wood Hunter, George Arthur Young and John Obadiah Richards.

QUAKER SUGAR AND CREAM CORN

This is a line we are now packing which we intend to make our main specialty. Packed from the finest Maine Seed, with the ears all selected, with the cans well filled with corn and not watery juice. We believe there is a future for an article of this class of goods if properly placed on the market and the attention of the consumers called to its superior merits. There is no line of goods packed in cans that varies so much as corn in quality, consequently there should be an opening on the market for a really high-class article, something in which the goods were not only at the tip-top but that every can could be depended on to be of a high and uniform quality. This is what we claim for Sugar and Cream and the reputation of the Quaker is behind these assertions. While the contents inside of a can are of more importance than the outside, it may not come amiss to say that these goods are sent out in very handsome embossed wrappers, far superior to anything we have yet seen from our competitors.

GREEN FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

EUROPEAN FRUIT CROP.

REPORTS of foreign fruit crops are somewhat disconcerting. There appears to be a serious deficiency in supply in most European centres.

In England, early apples are a very bad crop. Late apples will only be about one-third crop. The weather through May was cold with east winds, followed with sharp frost, with ice and snow in some counties, causing irredeemable damage.

Pears very inferior crop.

Plums in some districts total failure, in others a fair crop, but reports on the whole are poor.

France, particularly in the south, has only half its usual crop of fruit. Cold weather in May is responsible for the decrease.

Holland and Belgium have but a small crop, the bulk of which will go to England, Ireland, and Germany.

Germany's crop is poor on account of the excessive drought of April and May. Early fruit is particularly light.

London, Liverpool, Glasgow and Hamburg can take all the apples Canada can consign during July and August, provided they are well matured, of sufficient size, and of good kinds.

ROOT PROSPECTS.

The unanimity which prevails throughout the Province of Ontario with respect to the condition of the root crop is most marked. The season has been especially adapted for the development of the crop. In the early part of the season considerable apprehension was expressed regarding the effect of the wet weather on the potato crop and in low-lying ground it was necessary in some cases to replant the second time. But one danger is now to be feared, and this is the presence of blight. In some sections this has unfortunately already made its appearance on clay land with the result that less than one-half the crop was found suitable for market. In York county, isolated cases of blight have appeared, but the general outlook is of the most hopeful character.

Turnips in almost every part of the county are looking thrifty, and already give evidence of heavy yield.

The average acreage of sugar-beets under cultivation is 800 more than last year. The amount contracted for by the farmers at the beginning of the season was 600 acres in excess, but the extra 200 were sown voluntarily. Everywhere, not alone the sugar-beet, but mangel wurtzel and turnip look well. In Wellington, Halton and Peel counties the outlook is excellent. Up around Milton harvesting operations are practically completed, being greatly in advance of many other points. In the Alliston district the pea crop is excellent, the comparative absence of the bug, coupled with only moderate rainfalls, serving to make the pea crop a paying investment.

ALMOND PROTECTION.

IT is reported that a syndicate has been formed by seven Malaga exporters which will probably have control of the almond market. "Compania Almondrera" is to be the corporate name of the "trust." It is a limited liability company, and will operate under a Spanish deed.

The shares are 200 in number and are divided among the seven mercantile houses referred to.

The syndicate will have to do only with the purchase of the almonds from the growing districts, and will not intervene with respect to the ultimate sales to American and European buyers.

Each local exporting house will retain its identity, and business will be conducted along lines followed in past seasons. The purpose of the trust, its organizers frankly admit, is to reduce first cost prices and to eradicate certain alleged abuses heretofore practiced by local speculators and brokers.

Prices of almonds, cost and freight for the season beginning next month will not be materially affected by the new arrangement, though the selling price of the different local houses is likely to be more uniform than in other years.

The Spanish almonds of commerce are the "Jordan" and "Valencia" brands. The ordinary crop of the former is about 70,000 boxes, while the yearly yield of "Valencias" usually numbers more than double that figure. Malaga is the exporting centre, and, as no competitors are in sight, it is likely that the "Compania Almondrera" will handle the entire business.

The agreement is for five years and the capital listed at one million pesetas ($140,000).

APPLE EXPORTS DECLINE

Latest reports denote a considerable decrease in the shipment of apples from Canada and United States to European ports. For the week ending September 9th, the total number of barrels despatched was twenty thousand seven hundred and one, against thirty-five thousand four hundred and two in the corresponding week of last year, thus showing the shortage of fourteen thousand seven hundred and one barrels. Advices denote demand good and favoring well colored stock.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

Green Fruits.

Toronto, Sept. 28th, 1905.

LOCAL markets have been showing great activity. Domestic fruits have been ruling. Arrivals have been plentiful and prices well maintained.

California fruits have practically lost interest and it is not expected that much bulk arrivals will come to hand. Red bananas are off the market.

Lawton berries have also fallen out of stock and there has been a general drop in values, as will be seen by comparison with our last week's report.

QUEBEC MARKETS.

Green Fruits.

Montreal, Sept. 28, 1905.

The fruit dealers have no important change to report. There is still a fair demand for all fruits.

California fruits are steady at last week's prices.

Grapes seem to enjoy a good inquiry at fair prices.

Bananas are still plentiful, fifteen cars having arrived last week. Quotations are somewhat easier.

Lemons are lower, more on account of a drop in demand than to abundance of stock, as only a few are seen on the market.

Jamaica oranges have also receded a little. Only a small demand is reported for them in barrels.

Apples are plentiful and sell well at last week's quotations. Other fruits are unchanged. We quote :

The Montreal onion crop is nearly all on the market. Red onions are plentiful but found a little small in size; yellows are short, in fact about only one-half of an average crop, but quality is very fine. Cabbage, tomatoes and potatoes are still finding their way into consumption, but low figures are ruling generally. Other prices unchanged.

ST. JOHN.

Green Fruit.

St. John, N.B., Sept. 28.

Oranges are high and sell but slowly.

Lemons high and quality but fair.

Bananas are easier. Other fruits are now in demand.

Apples are quite plentiful. While best grades are held at full price there are lots of cheap apples. Some of the soft fruit is particularly good stock for immediate use.

Peaches are fairly plentiful.

Pears are cheap. A large quantity of Nova Scotia offered.

Grapes are lower and market well supplied

Onions are perhaps rather easier. Quite large quantities of Canadian are now here. Quality is good.

BISCUITS AND CONFECTIONERY

A WARNING.

A VERY objectionable custom is at present ruling on the European continent in the confectionery world by the making of a sweet-meat confection in which a filling in liquid form is preserved of strong alcoholic mixture.

The reprehensiveness of such a proceeding cannot be too strongly pointed out Possibly the liquor itself does not violate any liquor law, but the indiscriminate eating of confection of this kind cannot fail to be productive of most objectionable results.

It is obvious that it would be quite possible to obtain a toxic dose of alcohol by taking a sufficient quantity of the confection.

The European authorities are beginning to awake to the importance of the situation. It is of first importance that the Canadian market should be warned of this danger as we understand that this confection has already secured an entrance into this market.

"WHY POPCORN POPS."

SOME interesting facts have come to light regarding the "popping" of the favorite popcorn. The Department of Agriculture (U.S.) has made various investigations, and have published the following particulars, which will be found of great interest to all users of popcorn :

The popping of popcorn is due to volatilization of the oil contained in the kernel.

Field corn does not pop as readily as popcorn pops because the outer portion of the kernel is more porous, permitting the escape of the oil as it volatilizes, while in the case of popcorn a great pressure is developed in the kernel by the confined oil and the kernel is suddenly exploded and turned wrong side out.

In composition popcorn differs from ordinary corn in having a larger proportion of corneous element and a great per cent. of oil.

Popcorn pops more readily when dry because when moistened the kernels are swollen, more porous and toughened and do not explode so suddenly and completely as when dry and hard.

Recently experiments were undertaken by an independent investigator to secure information on this question, the trials being made with Indian corn. Kernels extracted with ether were allowed to dry slowly, and popped successfully on being heated, showing that the oil was not the cause of popping.

Other questions were also studied. It was found that the quantity of water-soluble material was much the same in popped and unpopped corn, being 19.3 per cent. in the popped corn and 21.12 per cent. in the unpopped on the dry-matter basis.

Tests with cupric oxide showed that no more than mere traces of reducing material were present in either the popped or unpopped samples. It was found that corn lost moisture on popping, containing then 7.45 per cent., as compared with 12.13 per cent. raw. The tests made to learn whether soluble starch is formed by popping gave negative results.

Some tests were made to learn the influence of skin on the popping of the kernels and the popping qualities of different parts of the kernel. Skinned kernels would not pop, i.e., burst, at all. When kernels not skinned were cut in two crosswise, the halves nearest the cob did not pop, while the outer halves popped readily. When the skin was removed, neither portion would pop. When the kernels were cut in two lengthwise, both parts popped readily. When unskinned kernels cut into quarters were tested, it was found that none of the quarters from the cob end would pop. Some of the quarters from the outer end of the grain popped, though other specimens would not. When cut in halves crosswise, soaked in ether for five days, and dried, the halves which came from the pointed end of the kernels popped successfully, while none of those from the inner end would pop. When the skins were removed and the kernels were soaked in ether three or four days and dried, no success was met with on trying to pop them.

PREPARED FLOUR.

THERE is a good deal of movement in the world to-day, and movement, too, of a natural order, the necessary outcome of the acquirement of knowledge, and the necessity of each advancing stage. The housewife at one time baked but once a week; it was all that was necessary—on that day she baked sufficient bread and cake to last the following week out.

She bought her flour from the nearby mill, her yeast from the local brewhouse, and all went well. Everything has changed since then. The modern housewife looks to far different ways and means, and expects to find most of her things ready to hand and to use. Her duties to-day would never allow the antiquated methods of great-grandmother's day.

Millers, like other trades, have at last come to acknowledge this advancement, and have set themselves to meet the changed conditions. Time was when millers ignored such minor trades as supplying self-raising and prepared flours for cakes, but during the past few years many firms have gone into these smaller side lines, to great pecuniary profit, and the demand is one of steady advancement.

The housewife cannot spend much time over her baking, and the self-raising flour comes in to help her economize time, and allow her to spend more time over her other domestic work.

To make the old-fashioned cake she required a variety of ingredients, and often had to postpone making the favorite cake, because she had run out of some necessary ingredient. The latest achievement in prepared flour alters all this.

The handy cake flour of modern date is an immense saver of trouble, and should prove an indescribable boon to all busy housewives. Packed in the favorite carton style, it is convenient, clean and handy. The flour is supplied in almost any kind of mixture, currant, cocoa-nut, sultana, madeira seed, etc., etc.

It is as yet early days in manufacture of prepared flours, but they are sure to make considerable headway. Now is the time to make money out of the proposition, and grocers should not be slow to take advantage of the idea.

MORE YIELD AND A BETTER LOAF

It is claimed that a new process of flour milling has been discovered in England. The inventor asserts that by the new process a much larger quantity of flour is obtained from the wheat than by the old process. The total yield under present conditions is seldom more than 72 per cent. of the wheat milled, by the new system this yield is increased by upwards of 15 per cent. It is, moreover, claimed that by the use of flour made in this process a much more wholesome and digestable loaf is obtained than is at present made, and this by comparison with the best known grades of flour.

A NEW MILL FOR CALGARY.

A new flour mill is being erected at Calgary, Alta., for the handling of wheat in the immediate district. It is expected that about one million and a half bushels will be collected in the immediate vicinity. The present boycott in the Oriental market against American products is taken as an excellent opportunity of obtaining an entrance into that market for Canadian flour and the Fall wheat grown in that district is particularly adapted for the Oriental market.

When this mill is completed, the capacity of which is about 1,000 barrels, there will be three mills in Calgary, each of a capacity of from nine hundred to two thousand barrels

ENGLAND'S OLD MILL.

The demolition was last month commenced of the well known High Mill at Yarmouth, which enjoyed the reputation of being the highest windmill in England. The cap was 120 ft. from the ground, and it had served as a landmark far and wide, by sea as well as land. Circular in form, the mill contained 12 floors. Its walls were 12 ft. thick, and are estimated to contain hundreds of thousands of bricks. It was built in 1812, when it cost £10,000, and all its working "life" was in possession of Press Bros. It was discarded some years since, and a few months ago was offered under the hammer with the obligation upon the purchaser to take it down, when it realized £100.

EXPERT MILL FOREMEN.

We have several times made reference to the great demand evident among up-to-date master millers for more expert knowledge, as exemplified in the large number of those asking for highly trained managers, foremen, and workmen. We have long seen that this must come about, and have time and again urged both men and masters to get ready for it. The British and Irish miller has, in the aggregate, attained to an unique position, and he will be wise in straining every point in order to keep it. The equipment of the mills of to-day is the result of hard struggling and persistent effort. Flour milling machinery is at its best in our mills, but it will only run as it is made to run, and without the man who has to set the pace understands the multitude of reasons which govern that pace the machinery is of very little good. Master millers, as a whole, have, we are sorry to say, been long in finding this out, and the consequence has been that not enough men of the right stamp have been induced to make flour milling their life's work.

TOBACCOS, CIGARS AND ACCESSORIES

TOBACCO CROP CONDITIONS.

THE tobacco crop is attracting a good deal of attention all through America at the present time. Much anxiety was felt earlier in the season, on account of the heavy rain storms, and at one time fears were entertained that the crops would suffer. On the abating of the wet, better prospects arose, and excepting the appearance of "worm," the crop will be quite up to ordinary.

In Pennsylvania the greater portion of the tobacco crop has been secured in good condition, and most of the tobacco is reported as being large in yield and excellent in quality.

In Virginia tobacco cutting, housing and curing has been vigorously prosecuted and only a few late fields remain to be harvested. The yield of this crop for acreage is very good and the quality, on the whole, satisfactory, though the light grades are somewhat chaffy locally.

In Kentucky rapid progress has been made in the cutting and housing of tobacco, many fields having been nearly all cut, while the crop as a whole is probably half housed. There have been few complaints of firing and houseburning, most injury from these causes being previously reported. Worms continue to do damage in a number of localities.

In Wisconsin tobacco cutting is nearing completion, and, except in those sections where damaged by hail, the crop is excellent. In Columbia county tobacco is nearly all shedded and a fine crop, and in Crawford county it is nearly all housed and a good crop generally.

In North Carolina tobacco is all cut and cured in the east, while in the central and west portions a great deal has been cut and cured, but there are some farms where cutting is only about two-thirds done. In general the leaf is good in quality and color, but it lacks weight. In the west part it is firing and specking badly in places. The crop will only be light, about 60 per cent.

In Ohio a great deal of tobacco has been housed in good condition during the week, and the weather has been favorable for curing.

In Tennessee tobacco cutting is nearing completion and being housed and cured; some damage by worms is reported, but, as a rule, the crop is excellent in point of quality.

In South Carolina tobacco grading is well under way in Darlington county districts.

SMOKING A PREVENTATIVE.

"It's an ill wind that blows nobody good," is a proverb which has had another confirmation. The revenue returns from New Orleans for the month of August show that the manufacture of cigarettes and smoking tobacco took a big bound, whereas naturally during the confusion caused by the epidemic of yellow fever the business should have suffered a setback. This was due to the general belief in the new theory of the mosquito spreading the disease, and every one seems to have taken to smoking to drive him away.

TOBACCO DRINKERS.

Tobacco drinking is not one of the bad habits of to-day, but several hundred years ago it was a pretty prevalent custom. A poet took occasion, in 1643, to attack it. He wrote:

"To quaffe, roare, sweare and drink tobacco well
Is fit for such as pledge sick healths in hell."

John Swan was the name of this poet, and the place where is found his couplet against tobacco drinking was in a book published by him in which he attacked all the vices of the age.

It seems that they powdered up the herb, those old-timers, mixed a half teaspoonful of it with a whisky glass of hot water, and tossed off this red-brown fluid as one would toss off a lemonade.

The effect of drinking tobacco was like the effect of smoking. It soothed and calmed the nerves, producing a pleasant feeling of contentment.

It did not appear to be particularly harmful. Many a tobacco drinker lived to a green old age.

THE "BRIAR" PIPE.

The so-called briar pipe is not made of briar at all, but from the root of a particular kind of heather, called in French bruyere, which grows on the hillsides of the Tuscany Alps in north Italy and on the mountains of Corsica. English tradesmen, finding the correct word bruyere somewhat difficult for the English tongue to pronounce, reduced it to briar, and in this way the corruption crept in, and was established by popular usage. Originally Swiss peasants made snuff boxes of this wood, and when snuff taking became unfashionable the peasants turned their attention to making pipes from the root, and found a ready market for them.

ECCENTRIC ADVERTISING.

IT is somewhat interesting to notice the eccentricities of our cousins across the border. Anything that will attract attention, no matter how strange or even alarming, is used to secure notice. Following we give copy of the latest circular issued by the Booth Packing Co., of Baltimore, who are much given to this kind of advertising:

"Thou vague, inscrutable product of the vegetable kingdom, come forth! Reveal, and appear in thy accustomed garments of innocence and lucidity! Come out into the sunshine, full three days hath it been since we've said "It rains," and for two long months, in vain, have thy hiding places been sought! What's the use? Why fret and worry over a condition as easy to change as to add a cubit to one's stature? 'There ain't no tomatoes; there's been too much rain,' said a farmer yesterday, while the mud on his boots and the price he received most positively justified his statement.

"Were both packers and jobber created like double-headed Janus—one face forward, the other backward, looking into the future and the past as well—the season would have been as smooth and serene as a summer sea. What a fortune Janus would have made with his forward head, granting he could distinguish a tomato from a bath towel! Flirt not with the future, be content with the present. Many dreams of anticipation have been embittered by stern, cold, unbending reality. We have been doing our best to keep you informed of the tomato market. From the rising to the setting sun we have searched the nooks and crannies of several States for this 'rara avis,' to the end that intelligent calculations could be made. We recognized our inability to forecast, hence our resignation is in your hands.

"Remember the Dutch legend, how the peasant woman meeting a hunter in the forest, mystified and wearied the pursuit by her rapid changes into a leaf, a flower, a tree? The prices we have made the past three weeks no doubt have mystified you; they were hardly cold before they were changed, so rapid was the advance in the price of fresh fruit. These lightning changes are shocking! We'll try it again. These figures may be good only on the day this circular is issued; they are subject to change at any moment. You will have a basis at least upon which to shape a purchase, and a wire will enable us to give you positive prices for immediate acceptance and shipment."

CLOSING THE YEAR.

EACH year should, as far as possible, stand on its merits, i.e., transactions for the period should all be put through within the period. If this is impossible, as is very often the case, these items should be looked after very carefully on what might be termed an "outstanding list," which may be compiled as the various items come up in the ordinary course of business. These items may represent amounts due (liabilities); unearned, or, to use a different term, prepaid amounts; (assets), which would be brought down in the respective accounts on the debit or credit side, as the case may be.

This subject may properly be divided into four headings necessary to the preparation of an annual statement, as follows: 1, stock taking; 2, purchases; 3, sales; 4, outstandings.

1, Stock Taking.—Inventory sheets should be prepared from the catalogue and typewritten, together with the prices of the various lines entered at cost, or if the advance on cost is uniform the list prices may be entered and the cost discount deducted from the total. So as not to interfere with the current shipments of goods, the different lines on the shelves should be labeled as to brand and quality, and when orders are filled deductions made from the different labels. A day or two will usually suffice to call in the stock and enter on the sheets already prepared. At the same time stock of catalogues, price lists, advertising matter and stationery should be taken carefully so as to insure the correct amount being brought forward as an asset in the accounts, most of which in these cases are "expense accounts." The stock sheets should be extended and the extensions checked to insure correctness.

2, Purchases.—It is very important that all purchase invoices should be put through the "purchase journal" for goods actually taken into stock. A record of purchase invoices should be kept as received by either numbering and recording in a book for this purpose, or by using a yearly record book in which are entered the names of the different concerns from which goods are purchased, opposite each being the columns for the months of the year. By referring to this book it can be ascertained at once whether any goods have been purchased in a certain month, and a statement may then be procured which will give full particulars as to dates and amounts; when these statements have all been received the amounts should be checked off with the invoices entered in the "purchase journal," and a list of all unpassed invoices handed to the different departments with the request that full particulars be given as to whether the goods represented by such invoices were taken into stock or not. By using this method and by a thorough scanning of the receiving books for goods not invoiced, it is almost certain that all purchase invoices have been credited.

3, Sales.—Special care should be exercised to see that all goods shipped, which were not taken into stock, were charged through the "sales;" also that all rebates, allowances, etc., are credited through the "sales." If this should be impossible at the time, provision may be made in the "sales" account when closing the books. All goods returned by customers should be taken into stock and credits put through "sales" for same before closing the books. Output shipments from factories, even if received after stock at the warehouse has been called in, should be added to the inventory.

4, Outstandings.—Insurance should be calculated as to the amount of unearned premiums, and the amounts brought down in the respective accounts as an asset. Provision should be made for magazine, sign and permanent advertisements from which no direct benefit would have been derived in the current year. An amount should be set aside as an asset for the approximate value of the catalogues, price lists, etc., on hand when the books are closed. The actual stock of stationery should be taken, priced at cost, and the value brought down as an asset in the "stationery" or "expense" account. Provision should be made in the "purchase" and "sales" accounts for rebates, allowances, etc., due customers on sales or due from creditors on purchases. Amounts should be brought down in the expense accounts as an asset or liability, as the case may be, for taxes, rents, water, fuel, light, telephones. Freights on goods shipped and charged in the fiscal year and not yet paid, should be provided for. Also freight on goods held on consignment at some distant point should be taken into account as the value of such goods has been enhanced by being laid down at a distance. Salaries of officers and foremen should be apportioned over the different departments, also salaries or wages of all unproductive labor. Interest on notes due, discount on bills discounted, sales discount and purchase discounts should be provided for if thought advisable.

KEEP A LIST OF LEAKS.

DID you ever seriously try to make a list of the holes through which possibly little bits of profit were constantly dribbling away? Overbuying is a leak. An extra five off for taking a quantity is a saving, but if the quantity lasts you a period of four times as long as the time it takes to get a fresh supply from your market, you have lost the profit on a part of your capital unnecessarily tied up. And if that loss of profit exceeds your saving, it is not necessary to have additional proof that overbuying may be a leak. Stowing away goods likely to sell on sight, where they cannot be seen, is a hole through which leak profits that might have been made had the goods been properly displayed. Failing to care for goods, so that they get shop-worn and must, therefore, be sold at reduced prices is another leak. Holding of seasonable goods until they become utterly out of style, rather than getting rid of them by taking a small loss, is still another leak.

Letting windows go unwashed and unchanged is a decided leak. Not only are you thus losing profit on sales that might be directly caused by particular displays in the windows, but you are also failing to improve an opportunity right at hand in the form of those windows to give passers-by most convincing reasons for coming into your store. Letting your bills go unpaid until too late to secure discounts that may be offered for cash is another leak. Very few cash discounts are so small but that they afford a profit over and above the interest that would have to be paid were it necessary to borrow money with which to pay the bills.

CHEAP FLAVORINGS

are the substance of half the vinegars and, of course, the cause for half the complaints. Pure vinegar can only be made from pure fruit.

GOLDEN RUSSET VINEGAR

is made from none but the purest fruit—wholesome apples. No complaint where Golden Russet is used, because there are no acids, cheap flavorings, etc., in it. You will find that it pays to keep a supply of Golden Russet Vinegar.

ROSE AUTOMATIC GRINDERS

DIRECTIONS

1. Stand the Grinder on a table, holding it upright with one hand, as shown in cut, and do not change its position while using. 2. Run the knife blade through one of the slots, its edge resting between the metal disc and emery wheel, as shown in cut. 3. Use some pressure and run the b'ade its full length forward and backward quickly a few times, which grinds one side. 4. Place the knife blade in the other slot and repeat the operation, as at first, which grinds the other side of the blade.

Modern Merchandising demands modern methods. The ALLISON COUPON BOOK is a strictly modern CONVENIENCE and SAFEGUARD against mistakes and consequent loss of money. It is better than any pass-book, punch or check system ever invented, and its absolute accuracy makes it the CHEAPEST SYSTEM on this big earth—excepting, of course, the cash system. See here:

IF A MAN WANTS CREDIT

for $10, give him a $10 Allison Coupon Book, charge him with $10, and there you are. No trouble at all. If he buys a plug of tobacco for ten cents, just tear off a ten-cent coupon—that's all. And so on for all his purchases up to limit of the book. NO PASS BOOK. NO WRITING. NO TIME LOST. NO KICKING. There are other Coupon Books, of course, but why not have the best? "There's no Tea like Ceylon."

Other scenes may seem fair at a distance, but there's no place like home. Most people have had that proven to them. Other teas may look nice in the package, but there are no teas like

CEYLON TEAS

Most grocers have had that proven to them also. Seller of Good Teas, you know this. You prove it every day to your entire satisfaction, but yonder merchant does not know because he has never tried to prove. You will bear with us while we repeat the story for this merchant's sake. Ceylon Teas are incomparable. They make friends by the thousand and retain them, because the blending of honesty with quality constitutes a sterling character in tea individuality. It begets confidence, encourages thrift and enlarges the commercial outlook. Sales and steady customers follow. These are important truths for you, the Man Who is Hesitating. Don't act rashly, but don't be improvident. Examine your tea policy. If you see room for Bigger Sales, know then that it is time to fly the new banner:

Made in Canada

These words are the key to the success that every true Canadian heartily desires for this fair Canada of ours!

Why should we buy goods of any description that are made in a foreign country? The making of foreign goods does not give employment to our artisans. It does not retain money in this country.

Why use Foreign Salt? We have CANADIAN SALT that is superior to any foreign salt that is made

Why not help build up Canada by using

Canadian Salt

and thereby employ Canadian labor, Canadian works, and Canadian capital?

Demand of your wholesale grocer Canadian Salt, and if he does not keep it write to us for prices and samples.

INDEPENDENT—SURE THING!

IT is easy to buy canned PEAS now at cost; also very easy to criticise them, but it takes a lot of study and hard work to produce a satisfactory canned pea. We hope that every Packer is producing the best pea possible. This will do more to increase the consumption than the cost prices. We are doing our best to make the "AUTUMN LEAF BRAND" just right. We have a few thousand cases more of the medium grade peas to offer at prices that will forever eliminate the Hawker in that line.

"AUTUMN LEAF BRAND CORN."—When it comes to nice fancy sweet sugar corn it is a 100 to one that we lead. Reasons why:—Our Manager learned the corn canning business with the world-renowned corn packer, J. W. Jones, of Portland, Me., commencing August, 1869, and followed the business from that time. He has a thorough technical knowledge as well as the practical experience of all these years, with and at the head of some of the oldest and largest Packers in the U.S., as well as with the most important Packer in Canada. If you want more proof, and the best line of canned corn, ask for the "Autumn Leaf Brand."

We Had an Object in View

When we chose the name OLD HOMESTEAD for our canned fruits and vegetables a little over a year ago.

We had an ideal in view when we set about organizing our company and equipping our factory a few months earlier.

Our Ideal was to put on the Canadian market a brand of Canned Fruits and Vegetables that should set a new standard of excellence. To that end we have taken care that:

I. Fruit and Vegetables should be choice and fresh.

II. Every precaution for cleanliness should be taken.

III. The most healthful and effective processes should be used.

In the Name of OLD HOMESTEAD we found a name that represented our ideal that stands for all that is fresh and wholesome and delicious, the kind of fruits and vegetables you enjoyed on the OLD HOMESTEAD when you were a boy.

We stand by our ideal. We ask you to put it to the test. We promise you pleased customers and increased business in canned goods if you put your trust in OLD HOMESTEAD Brand and put OLD HOMESTEAD Brand goods on your shelves.

Don't be satisfied with anything but the best. Insist on getting OLD HOMESTEAD.

With only some three weeks remaining until November 1st, the association "red letter day," the time seems opportune to review the work accomplished since the semi-annual meeting held in Winnipeg during the Exhibition week. Accordingly we publish this week the entire list of new members secured since that meeting. To put it mildly, this list affords tangible, indisputable evidence of very encouraging progress.

To complete what might be termed the statistical evidence of progress made by the association during the last few weeks we also publish the names of the various Manitoba towns in which a reform has been made in the selling price of tobacco. In all these towns tobacco was formerly sold either at cost or at a loss. In some places merchants were selling four plugs of Macdonald smoking tobacco for 25 cents. Thanks to the association, notices similar to those printed in The Grocer in previous issues have been posted up in all stores and now tobacco is being sold at a profit. The towns are as follows: Wellwood, McKenzieville, Brookdale, Emerson, Ridgeville, Arnaud, Dominion City, Otterburn, St. Malo, St. Pierre, St. Elizabeth, Oak River, Hamiota, Arrow River, Crandall, Miniota, Lenore, Harding, Kenton, Bradwardine, Carnegie, Forrest, Westwood, Beulah, Oakburn, Shoal Lake, Newdale, Strathclair, Kelloe, Foxwarren, Solsgirth, Birtle, Rossburn, Pendennis, Sinclair, Reston and Pipestone.

On the night of September 28th a very successful organization meeting was held in Birtle at which a strong association section was formed. This section comprises the towns of Birtle, Binscarth, Russell, Foxwarren, Beulah, Rossburn and Solsgirth. There were present at the meeting Messrs. Johnson and Young of Rossburn, McCrindle of Foxwarren, Anderson and Fisher of Solsgirth, Manwaring, Wickware, Walley and Miller of Birtle. Secretary Coulson represented Mr. Smellie of Russell.

Messrs. Smellie of Russell, Johnson of Rossburn and Manwaring of Birtle were elected to act as a committee on produce, staples and credit. Mr. Manwaring is to act as secretary of the committee. The following schedule of prices on staples was adopted to go into force at once (no cash discount to be given): Sugar (gran.) 15 lbs. for $1, $6 per cwt. flat. Sugar (yellow), 17 lbs. for $1. Corn, 15c per can, 2 for 25c. Peas, 10c straight. Tomatoes, 15c straight, 7 cans for $1. Strawberries, 20c, 2 cans for 35c. Syrup, 10 lbs. 60c, 20 lbs. $1.15. Salt, per barrel, $2.50, 50-lb. jute sack 65c, 50-lb. duck sack 75c. Rolled oats, 20-lb. sack 75c. "Force" and "Grape Nuts," 20c or 2 for 35c. "Vim," 2 for 25c. "Orange Meat," 20c, or 2 for 35c. Tobacco, as per printed list. Spools, 6 for 25 cents. Butter, 15c per lb. and return tubs. Eggs, 20c per doz.

It was distinctly understood that these prices go into effect at once.

On the night of September 26th a meeting was held at Shoal Lake of merchants in that section, which includes the towns of Shoal Lake, Newdale, Strathclair, Oakburn and Kelloe. Chas. H. McGrath, of Shoal Lake, W. L. McInnis of Strathclair and Thos. H. Peter of Newdale were elected a committee on produce and staples and credit, Mr. McGrath to act as secretary of the committee. The following schedule of prices on staples was adopted to go into effect at once (no cash discount to be given): Sugar (granulated), 15 lbs. for $1, $6.25 per cwt. cash, $6.50 credit. Sugar (yellow), 16 lbs. for $1, $5.75 per cwt. Tomatoes, 15 cents straight. Corn and peas, 2 for 25c. Cheese, 17c. Salt, per barrel, $2.50. Salt, jute sacks, 50 lbs. 65c. Salt, duck sacks, 50 lbs., 75c. Pickles, Blackwood & Dyson, sour, 90c; sweet, $1; pail or jar. "Force" and "Grape Nuts," 20c or 2 for 35c. "Vim" 2 for 25c. "Orange Meat," 15c and 25c. Tobacco, as per printed card prices. Butter in tubs, rolls and bricks, 14c and return tubs, or 15c and charge for tubs. Eggs, 18c. Spools, 6 for 25c.

In last issue were published the agreed price lists now in effect in the Hamiota and Gladstone sections. The Neepawa list is practically the same as the Gladstone. Merchants will find a comparison of the prices obtaining in the various sections very interesting reading.

in their effort to put tobacco on a reasonable selling basis. A notice signed by the merchants in Shoal Lake, Strathclair, Newdale, Rossburn, Kelloe, Beulah, Foxwarren, Birtle, Solsgirth, and Oakburn and similar to those published in previous issues of this paper, has been posted up in all the stores. At the bottom of the notice is this conspicuous sentence :

"ANY CLERK SELLING UNDER THESE PRICES WILL BE INSTANTLY DISMISSED."

It is amusing to note that Secretary Coulson because of his effective work in raising the price of tobacco to a reasonable figure is now a marked man among the general public in the country districts. He is pointed out with scorn in the hotels as "the man who raised the price of tobacco." While his good work in this matter may not popularize him with the buying public it has earned him the gratitude of country storekeepers in all parts of Manitoba.

This week Secretary Coulson is busy in the Griswold and Virden sections. The Griswold section will comprise the towns west of Souris as far as Pipestone and those west of Brandon as far as Oak Lake. The Virden section will comprise the towns of Virden, Sinclair, Reston, Pipestone, Routledge, Lenore and Hargrave. To-night (Friday) a big organization meeting of this section is to be held in Virden. A full account will appear in next issue.

While the arranging of prices on staples and produce is important work, the chief object of the association is to deal effectively with the long credit evil. With the association remedy all readers of The Canadian Grocer are familiar. It has been thoroughly discussed at two general meetings and in the columns of this paper and the result of that discussion has been the hearty approval of the plan. Moreover, the plan has the enthusiastic endorsation of the wholesale trade. The time for discussion has passed ; the time to act is at hand.

On November 1st all loyal members of the association must be prepared to close their books and sell only for cash. To this rule there is the exception that 30 days accounts are to be considered as cash. The great majority of the western farmers will have threshed and marketed their wheat on that date. Certainly by December 1st all will have money for their crops and be in a position to settle their accounts and pay cash. Hence in all parts of the country there is every reason why it should be possible for dealers to insist either upon cash payment or 30 days accounts. November 1st is the psychological moment for the inauguration of such a movement.

In more than 300 stores notices are posted up now announcing the change of policy which goes into effect on November 1st and it is so eminently reasonable that the public are finding very little fault. It matters not if they do grumble for the association members are standing together.

NOTES WORTH NOTING.

One man drawing a salary of $2,500 a year will be the means of putting $30,000,000 into the pockets of Iowa farmers, simply because he told them how to produce that much more value in corn. That man is Prof. Holden, sent out last autumn by the railroad authorities to lecture to the Iowa farmers.

The people of Iowa are congratulating themselves upon the prospect of producing this year the largest corn crop the State has known. Late newspapers are prophesying that the crop will be 400,000,000 bushels or more. And this result will be attained in spite of an unpropitiously wet planting season.

Nelson Monteith will address the convention on the opening day and many interesting discussions are provided for in the long program. A writer in the Technical World for September makes the statement that in the six years from 1897 to 1902 there were imported into the United States 137,000,000 pounds of Java and Mocha coffee, but that the grocers of the country sold to the people during the same period no less than 3,500,000,000 pounds of "Java and Mocha," which means that over three thousand million pounds of the coffee consumed by the people in six years was not what it was represented to be at all.

Judicious advertising is certainly of advantage to the salesman. The publicity that goes ahead of him prepares the way as do the posters of a coming circus, and he has the advantage of one who approaches the buyer with something about which he is informed, and has the battle half won. Happy is the solicitor who is backed by a concern who can make good on the proposition at hand. His days will be long in the land and his coming, if not at all times hailed with delight, will at least become a cordial and honest welcome.

Commercial Agent Siang, of Saigon, China, says the exports of rice this year were far below those of last year. Outside of a few recent transactions with France and the Philippine Islands, business is at a standstill, owing to high rates. According to tidings from the interior, the cultivation of the new crop is going on under normal conditions. Exports from January 1 to July 28 amount to 717,287,455 pounds, against 996,456,879 pounds for a like period last year.

Dairy Commissioner Ruddick has just arrived in England from a tour in Denmark, Holland and Germany. At a luncheon given by the president of the Chamber of Commerce at Bristol he referred to the complaints that have been made about delay in removing perishable goods from the docks, and asked British importing merchants to do their best to help Canadian exporters in this matter. Mr. Ruddick inspected the Royal Edward dock at Bristol now in course of construction at a cost of £2,000,000. He says he has been well received and aided everywhere.

It is easy to read the character of an employer without seeing him. One has only to go into his market and study the employes—the character of the employer is reflected in them. This of itself is not important ; the important point is that if the employer would have good assistants he must set them a satisfactory example. If the employer is discourteous to customers, the employes

THERE'S a heap of difference between the ordinary cheese sandwich and the sandwich that's spread with Imperial Cheese. Let the children once get a taste of Imperial Cheese, and there'll be less call for cake. It's such pure, wholesome, delicious food, so different in its taste and flavor from ordinary cheese that it will be a revelation of what delight can be gotten out of diet so simple as this. This cheese is of such consistency that it can be spread on crackers or bread like butter — never becomes hard or dry. It lends itself to a great many different ways of serving. It meets every requirement of an ideal food: the highest percentage of nutrition, a delicate flavor and a rich creamy taste, with just a perceptible touch of piquancy.

Sold in opal jars at all grocers; prices from 10 cents up.

The imports of soap in Trinidad, notwithstanding the existence of a local factory, average over $150,000 per annum. Blue mottled soap commands by far the largest sale, and this has never been successfully manufactured on the spot. The local establishment only attempts to compete in brown. The trade in high-priced fancy soap is necessarily restricted, but among the masses the consumption of the ordinary washing soaps which come in boxes containing twenty bars, weighing 56 lbs. net, is large, and forms the great bulk of the trade.

The Wm. Ryan Co. of Toronto, Ont., have purchased the packing and cold storage plant of the Wellington Dressed Meat & Cold Storage Co., Fergus, Ont. It is their intention to put the plant into the most up-to-date shape and run it to full capacity. It has a capacity of 450 carcasses per week and is a fine stone building with the very latest machinery and equipment both in cold storage and abattoirs. The plant was built by farmers and stock-growers in that part of Canada to take care of their product and to make them additional profit from the combining of stockgrowing and packing interests under one control. It was a co-operative scheme and as such does not seem to have made a success.

China's resources of coal and iron are among the largest and most favorably situated in the world. The extent of the great coal fields has been put at 400,000 square miles, more than seventy times the aggregate extent of all the coal fields of Great Britain.

It is expected that very soon Chinese coal will be delivered at far Eastern ports at prices with which no other coal can possibly compete, and that China, in consequence of this development, will become a large exporter of iron.

MEDITERRANEAN FRUIT.

THE activity of the primal market this season on the first business was an unusual one as the buyers in the various consumption markets did not have confidence in the new prices, which are the result of the new consortium of the Bank of Athens; but buyers begin to pay prices. The market last week was a firm one but not so strong. The reason was that the warehouses of the new consortium of the Bank of Athens were not yet opened. This was corrected as the warehouses began to open in all the important currant-producing parts of Greece and resulted in the market growing stronger. The local markets pay less than the prices paid by the consortium, but now with the warehouses opened and taking in currants with full energy, prices will reach the certain limit which the consortium pays and possibly higher. Opinion is that now is the best moment that importers can cover their needs. The prices paid for the cargoes of the first shipments were not so satisfactory as the people thought they would be, but opinion is that this resulted on account of the quality of the first boats which were not so well dried.

Raisins.

The crop is estimated "good," also quality seems to be very nice and dry with a fine color and taste. Shipments did not yet take place but the market will open at a parity of 33 shillings f. o.b. Patras.

Figs.

The market in figs was, and continues to be a very strong one. The chief reason is that there was a great demand from the ports of the Black Sea, also from the States. The United Kingdom has taken an interest in this article as last week a comparatively large business was done at a parity of 12 shillings f. o.b. Patras.

Olive Oil.

The crop of olives is not yet fixed as no one can guarantee the weather. If the weather continues up to the end of September old style as it is now, we are going to have a very good crop.

PRODUCE AND PROVISIONS

CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN

Montreal, Oct. 5, 1905.

RECENT country markets show decided firmness and an advancing tendency on cheese. Colored seems to be particularly scarce and in strong demand, but white cheese have also participated in the upward movement, whether this is due to manipulation or not, is not entirely clear at the moment, but our market has been more or less stagnant for some time and a little life, real or artificial, is a welcome feature to many who were obliged to stock up for lack of demand at prices which would leave even a small margin of profit.

The fact remains that prices are so near the top limit that nobody cares to be caught with stocks for the coming Winter months. It has not been a profitable season for exporters of cheese, and now that prices are high nobody is quite ready to risk even the remote possibility of losses, after the close of our navigation, which is always the beginning of a very dull period, taxing the patience of holders of cheese to the utmost.

Only when British importers realize that the available supplies may be insufficient for the natural consumptive demand will they advance their bids sufficiently to pay the holders of cheese in Canada for the anxiety and expense of carrying the goods for months to meet the almost unwilling demand, and our merchants have had so many disappointments in past years that they one and all consider "a bird in the hand worth two in a bush," and they would prefer not to carry any goods after the close of navigation if they can possibly dispose of them before.

Our stocks here are not burdensome, shipments have been in excess of last year's shipments and receipts show a decided falling off as compared with last year's receipts, the natural conclusion is therefore that our stocks must be considerably lighter than at this time a year ago. Reports from British markets speak of moderate stocks there, on the whole, therefore, the situation must be considered quite healthy and the only doubt remaining is the unknown probable consumption. If last year's Winter consumption of cheese in the U. K. could be repeated this year, we would experience a very serious shortage in supplies and consequently very high prices later on, but—the question is, will the consumption be as great this year as it was last Winter?

New Zealand will probably forward her usual quantity. At any rate there are as yet no figures at hand to calculate on much change either increase or decrease in quantities to be expected from that quarter. However, this is more or less used as "bull" or "bear" argument, as it may suit certain operators in Great Britain. If the demand is poor, it has a decided depressing effect on the market, on the other hand if the demand is good, the quantity to be expected from New Zealand is not too large to keep prices from advancing.

So, while our market is very firm now, and while the situation seems healthy and encouraging for those who hold stocks on this side of the Atlantic, the future is still in darkness on account of present high prices and the uncertainty of the consumptive demand during the approaching Winter months.

The situation on butter is somewhat different to cheese, meanwhile there is a good demand in Great Britain for all kinds of butter from all butter producing countries. Germany is said to be a strong competitor this year with Great Britain, and consequently prices are very high, but Australia will shortly be supplying large quantities of their butter to the British markets and our supplies will probably all be wanted for our own home consumption, as our production of butter during the Winter months is naturally very limited and if our exports keep up for some time longer we may have an actual shortage and very high prices. We have no substitutes, such as margarine, to fall back on as they have in the U. K., and our customs duties are prohibitive of any foreign imports, so we must carry sufficient stocks to supply our own needs. With the great scarcity of dairy butter, it seems inevitable now that our prices for creamery will advance considerably later on.

LONDON PRODUCE LETTER.

By Our Own Correspondent.

SINCE the last report from this side some two weeks ago the trade here has ruled very quiet as far as Canadians are concerned. In fact this has been the case for all butters, and business has been duller than ever just at the time when it was hoped a revival would set in. Now, however, the prospects seem to be really becoming brighter, and there appears to be a possibility of improvement. The lengthy period of inaction has been caused by high prices, and people have been buying, so to speak, from hand to mouth. The arrival of Australian butter on the market will naturally distract attention from Canadian.

Canadian dairies have not been quite satisfactory lately, some parcels showing a wide difference as to quality. Some reference was made to this a short while back in this column, but it is a matter which can suffer nothing by repetition, and it is possible that by thus bringing the defect to the notice of interested Canadians now the quality of Canadian dairies will be improved next season. There is plenty of time during the next six months to look into these details and to give the question of improved and regular quality the attention it merits. Some of the Canadian dairies which have arrived on this market have varied so much that the value has differed by many shillings—in one instance as much as 20 shillings. When a country is building up a c.i.f. business, as is Canada, quality is quite the first asset of worth, and upon it a great deal depends. Indeed a circular sent by the Government to farmers reminding them of this fact would not be without beneficial effect.

This brings up another important subject, viz., the cleanliness of boxes. This is a complaint which does not affect Canadian shippers of butter generally, but there are some who are very careless, and it is hoped that if they should read this they will take the hint in the friendly spirit in which it is offered by more than one British butter importer. One or two other minor complaints that have cropped up from time to time are that little splinters of wood very frequently find their way into the butter; that the butter is lumpy, or rather has hard bits next to soft bits and is generally irregular in this direction; that an unpleasant stale flavor sometimes is noticeable. It is suggested that this last may be caused by the careless washing of dairy implements, the stale flavor being communicated to the fresh make by particles of the old make which have not been sufficiently removed.

To-day (September 23rd) Australian butter is in good demand, particularly "choicest," quotations for which are from 108 to 112 shillings, as against 95 to 97 shillings this week last year. As might be expected this interest in Australian has distracted attention from Canadian, so that last moment reports state that the demand for Canadian is somewhat slow. Some parcels of secondary quality Canadian have arrived, but they show signs of storing, and are fetching 104 to 108 shillings. They do not sell readily, however.

It is worthy of note that Danish quotations, 122 to 124 shillings for choicest, 118 to 120 shillings for finest, are higher than for many years past. The reason is clear. Continental markets always make heavy calls upon Danish output about this time of the year, and prices are affected in consequence here.

The cheese outlook is quite satisfactory. Quotations are about the same as last week, 55 to 56 shillings per cwt., but some are inclined to ask 57 shillings, which is a good selling price. Sales all through the week have been transacted with facility. The undergrades of Canadian cheese are scarce at present.

PROVISION AND DAIRY MARKETS.

TORONTO.

DEMAND continues good for all lines of provisions. There are practically no surplus stocks on hand. Arrivals are improving in quantity, but markets being active they are quickly used up. There is a general firmness of all prices. Smoked breakfast bacon has advanced one cent. All mess pork is difficult to get, prices are consequently ruling very firm. Lard has made a still further advance of 1-4c. and is ruling firm at that price. Fresh meat has weakened somewhat and has dropped 1-2c.

Cheese— Cheese continues without much interest. There has been improvement in the export trade, which has given a little encouragement to the market. There is no perceptible change in quotaaions although the cheese boards indicate somewhat of a weakening tendency and the probabilities are that a decline will reveal itself at an early date. MONTREAL.

The provision market generally is very strong and firm. Live hogs are very scarce and the market much stronger. Prices, $7 to $7.50 per hundred. There is a good demand for dressed hogs, and a strong market. The ruling price seems to be $9.50. Hams remain unchanged: 8 to 12 lbs. at 14 1-2c., 12 to 18 lbs., 14c.; 18 to 25 lbs., 13 1-2c. Butter—The butter market continues firm. Holders appear to feel that they are safe in holding on for full quotation. Reports from U. K. seem to indicate that the trade there consider our prices high, but the market is firm and higher prices are anticipated. Shipments from this port show an improvement and up to date 98,846 packages more have been exported than in the same period last year.

Fine	0 22½	0 23
Medium	0 22	0 22½
Fresh dairy tubs	0 19	0 20

Cheese—While the cheese market has a firm tone, there is talk of a slight reaction this week. Reports from the Townships on Monday say cheese was sold at 11c. The demand has fallen off from the other side this week, although inquiries continue to arrive. Holders are strong in their demand, however, asking 12c. for colored Ontarios, though buyers will not go above 11 3-4c. to 11 7-8c. Whites are quoted at 11 1-2c. to 11 5-8c.; Townships, 11 1-2c. and Quebecs, 11 3-8c. The export of cheese shows an increase of 27,426 boxes over same period last year.

Eggs— The egg market continues steady, the tone is generally firm and receipts light. Straight gathered quoted at 19c. to 20c.; No. 2 at 17 1-2c. and cracked eggs 20c., and selects 22c. to 23c.

WINNIPEG.

Creamery Butter—There has been no quotable change in price since last issue, but supplies are not very large and in face of a big demand an increase in price is probable. Selling prices to the trade are as follows:

Finest fresh creamery, in 56-lb. boxes	0 23
" " in 28-lb. boxes	0 23
" " in 14-lb. boxes	0 23
" " in 1-lb. bricks	0 24

Dairy Butter—Supplies are not very large and since the beginning of harvest there has been a decrease in the amount of dairy butter offering. Produce houses are paying 16c. per lb. for No. 1 dairy, delivered in Winnipeg.

Cheese—Prices are maintained firmly at the recent advance. We quote:

Finest Ontario, large	0 13½
" Manitoba, large	0 13
" " twins	0 13½

ST. JOHN, N.B.

Provisions—There is a very fair sale for both barrel pork and beef, while clear pork is perhaps rather easier. Mess pork is very scarce and in some cases quoted higher than clear.

Beef is unchanged.

Pure lard is high and not freely offered. Refined lard is still low.

Lamb is held at quite a fair price.

Mutton and veal little sold. Pork comes to hand rather more freely and price is still quite high. We quote:

HALIFAX, N.S.

Provisions—The price of butter, eggs and cheese is fairly steady. Consignments of butter are improving. Creamery prints are quoted at 24c., solids at 23c., and dairy at 20c. to 21c.

The export demand is falling off some, and an easier market is looked for.

Eggs are in fairly good supply, but the price is unchanged, quotations being from 20c. to 21c. The cheese market is a little easier.

Windsor Salt

must not be confounded with ordinary Salt. In quality, it is as high above the common Salt of trade as can be imagined. It won't cake—it is pure, white, dry. There is no impurity in it because of the care taken in manufacturing. It is sifted, not ground. Every particle of it is a separate Salt Crystal. It pays to sell Windsor Table Salt, because it is so good, clean, pure—

it is all Salt.

IS IT REALLY A DECLINE?

RECENT trade returns which have come to hand denote a great increase in the consumption of coffee in Canada, and this, in conjunction with an apparent decline in the returns of the importation of tea for the past year, has been taken by some rather to denote that tea is losing its hold upon the Canadian people.

We do not think, however, that the circumstances will bear that interpretation. There are several features which must be taken into consideration when comparing statistics, prominent amongst which is the question of spot stocks.

In dealing with imports alone it is better to take an average of several years, and it is generally conceded that a three years' average will reveal pretty clearly the true nature of things.

Taking, therefore, the figures as we have them for the three years ending June 30, 1905, a gross importation of 81,730,571 lbs. is revealed. Placing this against the gross importation of three years previous, ending June 30, 1902, which shows a gross amount of 67,643,970 lbs., we have an amount showing a gross increase on importation of upwards of 14,000,000 lbs., or an average yearly increase of about four and three-quarter millions, which, after making due allowance for increase in population and a possible fluctuation in spot stocks, shows very material increase in consumption.

It might be remarked that the spot stocks of Canada are never very large, being mainly bought on sample only, drawn from the foreign markets according to the market demands.

It is an undoubted fact that coffee drinking is making considerable headway. With the influx of a great number of foreign settlers, who have probably been accustomed to the beverage, it is not surprising that coffee drinking should also show a marked increase, and this is certainly not indicative of a decrease in popularity of the more favored tea beverage.

There is a great tendency on the part of statisticians to jump to hasty conclusions. By far the better way is for them to consult the trade expert in a matter like this, as there are often issues at stake which control figures and make them in a measure unreliable evidence. From the reports that have come to hand from time to time from the Canadian tea markets it rather points to the conclusion that tea drinking was never more popular than it is at the present moment, and in addition a marked preference is shown for the higher and better grades of tea. Buyers are finding it necessary to differentiate in their selections of teas on account of the public taste becoming more sensitive of late years.

THE DUTCH BUTTER SYSTEM.

DAIRY COMMISSIONER RUDDICK recently took an extended tour through the countries of Holland, Denmark, and Germany, with the view of obtaining the best possible knowledge of the conditions under which dairying was conducted on the European Continent.

From the issue which has attended the exportation of Dutch butter products into other countries, it would appear as though that country had solved the problem of butter making, and without visiting Holland it would be impossible to appreciate the enormous precautions which the Dutch people have taken with a view of placing the best possible article on the market. The country districts are particularly quiet. The farms are placed at intervals of about a mile apart, and in passing through the country one sees little of the farmers themselves.

The key to the situation appears to be in an excellent system of co-operation, and the control which has been introduced of late years by the Government. Any farmer or creamery that desires can come within the purview of the system. If he does, he not only obtains the advantages it offers, but is also liable to heavy penalties if he attempts by fraud to benefit himself, and cause injury to the system.

So perfect is the system of butter control that if the farmer or creamery send out an adulterated article it could be traced to the individual farmer or creamery which manufactured it, when the penalties would immediately come into force. Thus far those thus leagued together have kept faith with the Government, under whose auspices the system has been established.

The system itself has some very interesting features, and consists in the distribution of labels for wrapping the butter. Every label is numbered differently and bears also a letter. A register is preserved of the quantity of labels with the number and the letters they bear, and to which creamery they are distributed. They are made in a special manner and so arranged that if after being placed on a package any attempt is made to remove them they become destroyed and are of no further use. The system has worked admirably, and no case has yet come to light in which a farmer or creamery has used the labels otherwise than for the best produce.

Originally the creameries were started and worked by private owners, but of late years a system of co-operation has evolved itself and is making considerable headway. The immediate and manifest result has been the raising of the standard of quality, and also obtaining a greater uniformity in manufacture, with the result that a ready market and much better prices are obtained than was the case before the co-operation.

To these two features may be traced the rapid and successful development of the butter industry of Holland, viz.: Co-operation, and the Government Butter Control System.

THE "PEDLAR" EVIL.

THE attention of retailers is being drawn more and more to the serious inroads being made by the increase of the "pedlar" nuisance.

There is no doubt but that it presents a serious menace to the retail dealer and particularly to the grocer. Perhaps in no line of trade is this more noticeable than in the packet tea trade. Not only does it place the grocer on an unfavorable basis of competition but it is also becoming a serious nuisance to the householder himself.

This class of trading is no doubt making headway in many districts. The time, however, has now come when retail storekeepers should become alive to the seriousness of the problem. It is clearly unfair to allow such men as pedlars, hawkers, etc., to escape the responsibilities of storekeeping by the mere payment of a nominal fee.

The storekeeper is the man to whom the large share falls of supporting local taxation for the improvement and development of his district and it is only right and proper that a measure of protection should be afforded him against unhealthy competition.

There are districts which have faced this question in a rational and substantial way. We understand that municipal authorities have full power to deal with this nuisance by bringing into force the power conferred on them to regulate the amount of license granted to such class of traders, up to the maximum of $100. In some districts this power has been acted upon and a substantial minimum license has been fixed, with the result that in those districts pedlars and transient traders are almost unknown.

These districts, however, are rather the exception than the rule and many districts are being seriously affected by this pedlar nuisance. Not only does he often succeed in pushing his wares into households which are found to have really cost more than they could have been bought for in the nearby store. Too often he is unscrupulous enough to resort to an immense amount of falsehood and calumny in order to effect his sales, and has been known to make false and libelous statements concerning many of the popular lines which the public is often credulous enough to believe, and which the local storekeeper has continuously to seek to disperse.

It is high time that the retail merchants roused themselves to activity in the matter, and combined to compel the various local authorities to take drastic measures to obliterate this growing evil.

OUR AUSTRALIAN EXPORTS.

"CONDITIONS of Canadian trade with Australia" was the subject under review in an address given by Mr. J. S. Larke, Canadian commercial agent for Australia, at a joint meeting of the Toronto Board of Trade and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, on Tuesday, Oct. 3rd.

Mr. Larke is a forceful speaker and showed a great knowledge of, and sympathy for, his subject. The audience of business men could not fail to go away with a clearer conception of the importance of the subject, and a fuller appreciation of the possibilities for expansion in the western colony.

The speaker dwelt at considerable length on the advantages of exporting manufactured products instead of raw materials, as at present. He also referred to the case of peas which, fifteen years ago, were exported from Canada in large quantities. Now there are none exported because the Canadian farmer has found that it pays him better to feed them to hogs and sell as bacon at double the profit.

In the Maritime Provinces there are immense deposits of gypsum. At the present time this is exported to the United States, manufactured into plaster of paris, and then exported to Australia. Inferior grades are made into cement and sold direct in Australia. Why should not both these be mandfactured in Canada, and the profits remain in Canada? With coal mines in close proximity the cost of production should be decidedly lower than in the United States. The same condition obtained in the pulp business. We should do the paper business of the world. In Australia there is a market, $3,000,000 of which should come to Canada.

Passing from this, he outlined the three requisites of successful competition. First, the problem of transportation must be solved. He ridiculed the idea of an ocean service from Vancouver. The cost of the overland haul of three thousand miles could never be overcome. The solution of the question as far as the eastern manufacturers were concerned lay in a line from Montreal. At present exports from Canada went via New York, and being comparatively small were discriminated against by the boats. However, total shipments were large enough to support a monthly service. He mentioned wool, hemp, and sugar as return cargoes.

The second requisite was economical manufacture, and this was advancing rapidly.

Thirdly, a preferential tariff must be worked out between Canada and Australia. This would require education, but was possible.

There is a great market over there. Canada cannot take it all, but she can take a great deal more than she is getting. To secure this increase it is necessary, first, that where the output of the factory is big enough and the market in Australia is sufficiently large and profitable, the factory should send over its representative to do business directly with the Australians. When these conditions do not exist, a combination of manufacturers of kindred, but not competitive, lines could unite in sending out an agent.

For still smaller exporters a company to send Canadian manufactured goods to Australia is needed. The company should have sufficient capital to have offices and warehouses in Canada, and similar means of doing business in Australia. The company would purchase its stocks in Canada and sell in Australia. It would not only be a great blessing to manufacturers with surplus stocks to dispose of, but with good judgment could do a very handsome and profitable business.

There was a sentiment of kinship which prompted the Australians to buy —all things being equal—from Canada in preference to the United States.

Mr. Larke spoke eloquently of the satisfactory business relations existing in Australia. The business men were of a high standard of integrity, and seldom failed in their obligations. Their imports now totalled $250,000 annually, and much of this was within the reach of Canadian enterprise.

At the close of his address Mr. Larke was tendered a hearty vote of thanks, and several manufacturers who had done business in Australia spoke feelingly of the kindness and assistance shown to Canadians in that country. "He was," as Mr. Archibald Campbell put it, "essentially the right man in the right place."

A FINANCE REVIEW.

A PROSPECTUS emanating from the Albert Soaps, Limited, has fallen into our hands and has been perused with great interest. It is not often that companies take the public into their confidence so completely as has been the case in this instance. A more unreserved statement of facts than is usually given is much to be desired. This company, however, has clearly given the status of its business. The reader is struck at once with the fact that the vendors are taking their compensation by means of scrip in the company, and have agreed to continue the management practically free, the only consideration being a nominal royalty on their "Baby's Own Soap," whilst the only cash payment they appear to be entitled to will be the value of the stock and the amounts due from their customers, which latter the vendors guarantee. This arrangement on the face of it has every appearance of a sound commercial flotation.

Continuing further a most satisfactory showing is revealed by the list of profits for the past four years. At January, 1901, the net annual profit was $11,549, whereas at the financial year of 1904 it had reached $15,374, an amount which would be sufficient to clear the mortgage interest and carry 8 per cent. interest to common stock. The amount of trade done in their special "Baby's Own Soap" is also excellent reading. From a moderate turnover of 27,000 boxes in 1886, it had risen in 1904 to the magnificent total of 233,000 boxes.

The directors' intention is to give the preference in allotment to their many trade clients, and by this means to insure increased interest in their sales, and at the same time securing to the shareholders an apparently thoroughly safe and profitable investment.

INGENIOUS ADVERTISING.

THERE are many schemes abroad which whilst not perhaps coming directly under the head of advertising, yet are of the nature of publicity which is the life of advertising. Prominent among the more recent schemes used is that of demonstration and sampling. The retail storekeeper does not perhaps realize the use to which he might put the simple methods of making his goods known. The average grocer has the idea that nothing can be done differently than has been done by himself and his neighbors with regard to groceries.

This is not the case, however. It is not necessary that an article should be new on the market in order to create a sensation. The sale of old and familiar staples can be greatly increased and fresh interest aroused in them by a little ingenuity and originality.

A wholesale grocer was once struck with the idea of booming his stock of rice which whilst being only an ordinary stock nevertheless had been bought well and showed good quality. He bought a number of new half-barrels, lined them with an attractive fancy paper, painted the hoops in an attractive manner, and after filling with rice placed a sheaf of rice straw, neatly tied with ribbons, on the top. He also enclosed with each barrel a number of well written booklets on how to use rice and also a few attractive show cards to attach to the barrels. He made the idea well known to the retail trade. The result of this novel venture was both beneficial to himself and to his customers. The retailer was struck with the novel idea, the fancy barrel and the booklets made it easy for the grocer to attract his customers' attention, the result being that the grocer's rice sales increased nearly ten times that year on the previous year's sales. There was no price cutting, prices were arranged to cover the whole of the expense. It was simply the extra interest created by the novel method of pushing sale.

SALMON IN PORCELAIN JARS.

Referring to an article in our issue of Sept. 15, in which it was stated that the porcelain jars in which the better class salmon was packed, were sold "only" to the English market, the announcement should have read "mainly" for the English market, as we find that porcelain packed salmon has been sold for several years by Lockerby Bros., of Montreal, under the brand of "Judge," packed by a U. S. packing house. The price is much dearer than the ordinary canned salmon and this has somewhat retarded progress. Its superior quality, however, combining with the idealistic packing of porcelain, has made it a desirable article, and sales are steadily advancing.

STILL SHOWING HER HEELS.

NOT only was Great Britain's export trade during the first half of the present year larger than that of any of her competitors, but the increase in comparison with the same period in 1903 was great.

This increase was £13,200,000 in Great Britain, £9,700,000 in the United States, £10,800,000 in Germany, and £7,700,000 in France.

In spite of the great expansion which has taken place in the trade of her competitors, Great Britain is still the centre of the world's trade and commerce, and she is likely to be so for some time to come. With her smaller population she can hardly be expected to maintain it for all time, but it is a source of gratification to know that in the race for foreign business the Mother Country is still showing her heels to the nations that are trying to outstrip her.

SUGAR BEET CULTIVATION.

THE counties of Essex, Kent and Lambton, in which the sugar beet is being cultivated extensively, are reported by our correspondent as showing a very satisfactory crop this season, and there is no question but what, with fair success, a much larger area will in a few years come under cultivation.

The Wallaceburg Sugar Co. is the principal outlet for beets cultivated in these counties. The price of $5 per ton realized by farmers, f.o.b. cars at shipping and water route points, shows a very handsome return, and though a great deal of attention is required on part of producers, the extra return per acre from cultivation of the beet will encourage the further extension of this branch.

The county of Waterloo, also, is a large producer of sugar beets, and these naturally find their way to the Berlin Sugar Refining Co.

The development of the native sugar industry is one of vital interest to the grocery trade particularly.

MR. HILL SCORES THE AMERICANS

MR. J. J. HILL, the great American railway man who is responsible for the progressive policy which built up the Western States, and who was born near Toronto, has been speaking frankly to his adopted countrymen on the Pacific coast on trade questions. He said the other day:

"The people who are banking on Oriental trade are bound to be disappointed. The United States cannot compete with foreign countries until we can manufacture products at a lower cost, which means cheaper labor. We have outgrown the present tariff laws.

"Great Britain furnishes the Orient half of its iron and steel, the United States less than one-tenth. The transportation rates are the same. We send only raw materials, such as iron, steel and raw cotton, a mere bagatelle. I will never build another ship in this country. The United States, unaccustomed to owning ships on the high seas, offers no encouragement to American bottoms. Kaiser William is the most active seeking agent in the world. The Chinese boycott has been the greatest commercial disaster America has ever suffered. If all other nations on earth closed their doors to American goods, it would not be half as bad as the Chinese exclusion alone.

"The American people are fools and vaingloriously patting themselves on the back over the so-called American invasion of European and Oriental markets, while the other countries, saying nothing, have practically monopolized the trades. As long as the people want politicians to make laws detrimental to the great commercial and industrial enterprises, the United States must expect to get along with a small share of the foreign trade."

PROBLEMS OF BUYING STOCK.

THE bane of the retail merchant is the slow selling article. Some merchants have the faculty of collecting a supply of this class of merchandise, which operates very materially against the profits of the business. A man of course cannot always tell what the demand for the goods he carries on his shelves will always be like, for he must take chances, and if he sold only those goods which are staple articles and which every other dealer handled, he would miss many opportunities to make money; but it is in estimating the size of the demand that he will be able to make for the goods that the secret of successful merchandising lies.

The average salesman introducing a new line is very prone to urge his customer to purchase more than he actually needs, for he figures that if the dealer has a large supply on hand he will make an extraordinary effort to push the goods. With this idea in view, special deals involving discounts for quantities are offered, and here is where the good merchant shows his calibre. He realizes that there is no money in tying up a lot of his capital for the sake of making an extra two or possibly five per cent., when he could invest the money in something which will turn several times in a year, and he will refuse to take advantage of these extra concessions and will buy conservatively.

The temptation is often very strong to load up on a certain article, but the man who has the courage and stamina to stick to the policy of buying only what he needs will have his capital in such shape that he has a big advantage over the man who is always looking for the extra quantity discount.

A NEW APPOINTMENT.

Mr. L. L. Stewart, Montreal, has been appointed city representative for the Blue Ribbon Tea Co., Limited, Toronto. Mr. Stewart is well known among the jobbing and retail trade of Montreal and should make good for the Blue Ribbon Co.

MARKETS AND MARKET NOTES

Ontario Markets.

GROCERIES.

Toronto, Oct. 5, 1905.

On the street a healthy tone was manifested. Whilst there has not been an abnormally high amount of business transacted, still, jobbers are expressing every satisfaction with existing conditions.

A great deal of interest continues to be manifested in tea buying on the street, and some very good samples were in evidence since our last issue, with prices ruling firm at previous quotations.

Mediterranean fruits are getting interesting as arrivals are approaching, and travelers are getting well posted in the various lines.

Canned goods are increasing in activity probably on account of the quotations being considered on a very moderate basis. It is still impossible to fully execute orders, but no serious difficulty is expected to arise.

Tomatoes have been occupying a good deal of attention as it was at first thought that the supply would be short and that prices would advance in the near future. American tomatoes are being watched lest they should invade this market, but such a contingency is not likely to arise as American prices, though low, are not on a low enough basis to warrant their affecting the Canadian market.

Sugar has developed considerable weakness since our last going to press and the expected drop of 10c. has manifested itself. This is without doubt entirely in sympathy with the extreme weakness of raws and the still downward tendency of foreign markets. Stocks are low, but no great activity is in evidence nor any disposition to increase holdings.

Syrups and molasses are showing little further interest. Prices continue firm.

Coffee trade has increased materially in volume of late and is attracting much greater interest. Prices are ruling fairly firm and no fluctuation is expected.

Tea has been attracting much greater notice, in fact, the trade is assuming a distinctly more healthy character. Buying is stimulated more by the increased attractions of the samples coming to hand and which are consequently bringing prices on to a more even basis.

Foreign dried fruits are expected to arrive at an early date and prices generally are assuming a firmer attitude. In currants particularly it would not be altogether unexpected for an advance to be reported at an early date, for reasons given in our special note. Raisins are very firm with a distinctly upward tendency. Walnuts are reported as revealing a great shortage on previous estimates and the crop is expected to be lower than has been the case for several years.

Rice is attracting a good deal of attention, the demand being stimulated by the short condition of the tapioca market.

Spice has only a limited interest and prices are ruling steady.

Honey is steadily making headway. Arrivals are reported good both in quality and in quantity, with prices unchanged.

Beans are not moving with much activity and there is a weakening of prices owing to the reports of the opening prices for new crops being on a lower basis than last season.

Fish has shown an increase of activity on new arrivals. Oysters are attracting a good deal of notice and are considered to be in very fine condition. Finnan haddies are now on the market at an 8c. quotation. Ciscoes have also arrived and are quoted at $1.25. Dried fish is uninteresting and prices only normal.

Grain is not very active and is manifesting a weakening tendency right through. It was expected that there would have been an increase in domestic demand, but buyers seem disposed rather to wait developments than to increase their holdings.

Flour as regards domestic trade has little of interest to report, local buyings being only of a hand to mouth character. Export trade, however, has made considerable progress and some fairly heavy sales have been reported, with prospects of an increase.

Breakfast foods are making steady headway, probably on account of the near approach of the Autumn season.

Hides, etc., have steadied themselves considerably during the week under review and the market is now considered to be in a much healthier condition. Prices, however, are considered to be on too high a basis to encourage the laying in of any considerable stock and no material change is expected in the immediate future.

Canned Goods—Canned goods continue to command active business. Sales have been effected well in advance and country orders are coming readily to hand. It is generally conceded here that the new prices which have been recently published are rather on the moderate side than otherwise. It is expected that some prices will advance in the near future. Canned peas are very firm and an advance may be reported at any time. Tomatoes are considered good buying at present prices. New prices for standard apples are now at $2.00. Other prices remain unchanged.

Sugar—The local markets for sugar have developed the weakening referred to in our last issue and on Tuesday, the 3rd inst., a general drop of 10c. on granulated was reported. This drop has no doubt occurred out of sympathy with the low prices which have been ruling for raws. Foreign markets have been in an unsettled condition for several weeks and sugar has reached very low prices and still remains with a weakening tendency at foreign points. The present drop was not altogether unexpected, as buyers had shown for some time little disposition to lay in stock. The increased demand for preserving naturally has kept the market in an active condition, so that trade has been pretty good. At the present moment there is somewhat of a lull in the sale owing to the season's demand having reached a final point. At the present moment there are few indications of any increase in trade beyond immediate enquiries. Should, however, the market assume a firm attitude on present low prices, increased trade may be expected of the nature of laying in stocks which are practically depleted. We quote:

Syrups and Molasses—Trade generally somewhat slow in this line, although there are indications of a movement in corn syrups. The confectionery trade in molasses has been active, but present reports denote somewhat of a decline in volume. The New York market indicates only small activity for molasses. Offerings have been low for primal markets and consumers are showing disposition to hold off and wait developments. We quote:

Coffee—The domestic trade shows a steady advancement of a character which denotes movement in consumption. There appears to be every evidence that coffee drinking is increasing in favor. Whilst trade generally is for the stronger grades of coffee, there is still manifested a growing disposition in favor of the milder grades. On the New York market an easier tendency is generally denoted. The spot market particularly has been dull and no trading of importance is reported on latest advices. European markets are also reported as easier. The primal markets denote shipments on a much reduced scale, but the stocks which have accumulated during the free movement of coffee from the plantations are now practically cleared up, so that future movement reports will represent the actual movement of coffee from plantations. Tea—Local tea trade continues somewhat active and samples which have come to hand continue to show better liquoring properties and experts are still expressing their satisfaction. Prices are consequently well maintained as general values are considered to show a more even basis. Latest reports from the London market denote somewhat of a weakening tendency, especially in Indians, owing probably to the falling off of heavier buyings which have been in evidence lately. Some very fine parcels, however, brought forth keen competition.

Ceylons, by comparison with Indians, might be described as much steadier, particularly for medium grades with a slight upward tendency. Ordinary teas, whilst maintaining their price, have not been particularly active. The better class of Ceylons were picked out and freely bidden for. China teas arrived in small bulk and were readily picked up.

Altogether the European market might be correctly described as having quieted down to a very steady basis, prices being considered as firm and showing good values. We quote:

Foreign Dried Fruits—Advices to hand report the shipment of currants from Patras on Sept. 10, so that bulk arrivals may be expected in the near future. Prices generally are firming up, walnuts particularly showing signs of an upward tendency. Reports to hand denote a crop not as good as the early short reports contained. Raisins are selling freely at present prices and values continue to maintain a firm aspect. Currants show clear evidence of a firmer attitude, the primal markets denote much firmness, owing to the fact that the warehouses of the new Government corporation are now opened and in operation which is speedily showing itself in

"AUTUMN LEAF" BRAND CREAM SUGAR CORN

May cost more, but it is worth more. Of the thousands of cases that went out last year not one can or tin has ever been reported as poor or swelled. How many brands have that record? Now, our Process is the Maine Style, whereby the corn is cut fine and the Cream scraped from the cob, thereby the delicious flavor is retained and the corn has a creamy appearance that cannot be obtained by the old style coarse-cut. We affirm that we have to offer a few thousand cases of the Fanciest Corn ever put in this or any other country. While we have Tomatoes and Raspberries, and intend packing a full line of CHICKEN SOUPS, CATSUP, etc. We claim the "AUTUMN LEAF" BRAND Cream Sugar Corn leads all others, and Mr. Retail Grocer, it is to your advantage ten to one that you have our BRAND on sale. You are the one we wish to reach. Write us, and we will tell you how you can obtain the best line of Can Goods that is packed, and at prices, quality considered, that you ever handled. We are answering all inquiries as fast as possible. If you are looking for a cheap line of goods do not try ours. We are not in that crowd. We me t them every day that say a can is a can. Do not be mislead, you can't fool the consumer. Try the "AUTUMN LEAF" BRAND, AND YOU WILL FIND A CORN THAT WILL PLEASE THE HIGHEST CLASS OF TRADE.

this applies also to farm and dairy products generally. Cheese, butter and eggs are holding up unusually strong, and the volume of business turned over this year is far in excess of corresponding period last year in all these lines.

Canned Goods—Remain unchanged and business is featureless. The Canadian Canners, Limited, are making a hundred per cent. deliveries on corn. What proportion of tomatoes will be delivered is not yet developed. Jobbers are making deliveries of the fruit orders as promptly as they are receiving them from the canners. Canned fish of all kinds are obtaining somewhat better attention, and in some grades of salmon there appears to be a decided scarcity. Lobsters also are scarce this season, and are being held at firm figures. Canadian sardines are getting more into favor with the trade. This is no doubt due to the improvement in the packing, as well as in the style of the tins. We quote :

Sugar—The sugar market still continues to show weakness. The reduction of 10c. per hundred lbs. was made by refiners on Tuesday of this week, making basis of granulated $4.60. The disposition of the American refiners seems to be, however, to try and check the slide, and the cutting that has been indulged in in that market may at any moment cease. Since the reduction noted above, the foreign beet market has recovered slightly. Among the jobbers the feeling continues to prevail that it is safe only to buy from hand to mouth, and they are basing their orders on this idea. Country merchants also seem to be of this opinion, as orders are light. We quote :

Syrups and Molasses—Conditions of trade in these lines are unchanged. Business is on the quiet side in molasses, prices of which remain unchanged. In some quarters higher prices are looked for and a better trade is anticipated on account of the light stocks generally held. Tea—The tea market this week has the interesting feature of a decidedly strong advance in China greens. Cables to hand on Monday advise of an advance of 20 per cent. on the lower grades. As Ping Sueys, during the past few weeks, have been much inquired for, the present advance has further tended to stimulate the demand. It is anticipated that a sympathetic advance in the medium and high grades may develop.

China blacks are also receiving attention, and a firmness in London is being reflected on the local market.

Ceylon greens maintain their strong position, and the advance noted in our issue of last week has provoked better business. Ceylon blacks also continue strong.

Japans—The position of the Japan tea market is one of continued strength and firmness. Up to the middle of September there was a definite shortage of over nine million pounds, and this, in conjunction with the fact that the market is bare of old stocks, (which was not the case last season) places Japan teas very strongly. Locally there has been little heavy turnover, but the market here is firm. We quote :

Foreign Dried Fruits— Considerable interest is shown on the street in dried fruits of all kinds.

Sultanas—Some active business has been done at slightly lower prices than last reported. Type samples received by mail show excellent quality.

Valencias—The market having receded from foreign prices held during the last two or three weeks, has induced fairly heavy buying for shipment by S.S. Jacona. Early fruit, which arrived via Liverpool, shows excellent quality in selected grades, but fine f.o.s. is not above the average. There are a number of unknown brands offering at prices considerably under those of old established marks. Qualities of these have yet to be determined.

Malaga Raisins—Are offering at remarkably reasonable figures, and some business has been done in loose muscatels, three and four crown. Lower grades than these seem to be neglected.

Dates—It is rumored that owing to the obstruction in the Suez Canal, the first arrivals at New York would be delayed some ten days, but so far this rumor has not been verified by those most deeply interested. Prices for this shipment have not yet been fixed.

Almonds—Taragona soft shell are still offered at prices last quoted, and large inducements to reduce same have failed to effect their object. Shelled Almonds—Are about as last quoted, with the usual demand at this season of the year.

Walnuts—The crop is reported the smallest on record, and in consequence prices are very firm. Early shipments will be made about the first week in November, but as yet there has been no great activity by importers and buyers. Shelled Walnuts—In sympathy have further advanced, which has likewise checked the usual heavy buying which obtains at this season of the year.

Comadra Figs—Contrary to the usual course, these have advanced from opening prices, and the market is reported firm, with the probability of still higher prices.

Currants—The syndicate being now practically in operation has had the effect of steadying the market. There are no changes to report from our last.

California Evaporated Fruits — The latest reports from the Coast indicate prices on all kinds of dried fruits to retain their firmness, and in the case of seeded raisins to be even somewhat higher. Prunes, also, are handled very firmly, and as the stock of 1904 crop is now reduced to a very small compass, holders at the Coast seem to be in a position to keep the market up, and perhaps even advance it. Rice and Tapioca—There are no changes to report in rice. Business is about as usual, with prices unchanged. Tapioca maintains a firm tone, and business is reported as fairly good by jobbers. The recent advance seems to have stimulated inquiries from the retail trade. We quote :

Spices—The general condition of the spice market is unchanged. Firmness is supported in cassias and ginger, while black and white peppers also are toning up some. Nutmegs still continue very cheap, and it would seem to be an opportune time for grinders to stop. The local conditions reported are for fair trade. We quote :

Maple Products—The market in maple products is on the dull side and prices are easy. The season, however, is expected to open up very shortly, and a good trade is looked for. The consumption is increasing every year, and the development of the maple sugar industry towards supplying pure goods will still further increase the demand. We quote :

Beans—Beans are getting interesting. Holders up west are asking from $1.35 to $1.45 for prime hand-picked. There are no quantities obtainable, and a corner is mooted. $1.50 to $1.60 seemed to be about the prices asked by the trade here this week. We quote :

Choice prime beans	1 50 1 65
Lower grades	1 40 1 50

Evaporated Apples—Evaporated apples are decidedly interesting to the trade. There is every reason to assume of further advance. Reports of speculators having bought up not only the evaporated stock, but also made a set for all the apples obtainable, are current on the market. Certain it is that it is almost impossible to get acceptance of any quantity of evaporated stock. Offers of carload lots have been turned down even at 7½c. Some old stock was cleared out during the week at 7c., but 7½c. to 8c. seems to be about what the trade has to pay for good stock.

Fish—There is a good demand for all kinds of fish, and supplies are ample for all requirements. Prices are low for this season of the year. The bulk oyster trade is beginning to pick up a little on account of the cooler weather of the past week. The price remains fairly high on account of these goods arriving by express. There are none as yet to hand by freight, though they are expected towards the end of the week, and it is not unlikely that prices will ease up.

In salt and pickled fish a few arrivals of salt herrings are noted, which are meeting with ready demand at prices quoted. The quality of same is good. New B. C. and Labrador salmon have also arrived, the quality of which is fine, and the demand good. Boneless and skinless cod are in about the usual demand. Stocks, however, of skinless are light and an advance is looked for. The same also applies to green cod. We quote :

BUTTER—Market unchanged and quiet, with prices steady; fancy, 23c. to 23½c.; choice, 22½c. to 23c.; good to fine, 22c. to 22½c.

CHEESE—Market firm, with fair demand; prices unchanged.

EGGS—Demand good, with fair supplies; fine weather helping production; straight gathered, 18c. to 18½c. at country points.

PROVISIONS—Market firmer owing to heavy demand for live hogs; prices unchanged.

B. C. REPORT.

Vancouver, B.C., Sept. 28, 1905.

THOUGH the Dominion Fair at New Westminster was not blessed with fine weather yesterday for its opening ceremonies, Jupiter Pluvius made amends to-day and took a day off, with the result that warm sunshine and Italian skies brightened the prospect considerably. Most creditable preparation has been made by the Fair management and so far the exhibitors have made equally creditable displays, though there yet remains a good deal to be done in some of the outside exhibits. Within the four main buildings the manufacturing exhibits, the produce, vegetables, fruits, grains and grasses are all in place. Many district exhibits are entered, one even from Edmonton and Strathcona, Alberta, which while noticeable for the lack of the fruit which forms the principal feature of British Columbia district exhibits, has a fine display of vegetables and grain, together with coal, brick, cement manufactures, leather, furs, etc.

The Transportation Commission appointed by the Dominion Government to investigate matters relating to trade and transportation in Canada, held a session in Vancouver this week, and is now in Victoria. Mr. J. H. Ashdown, of Winnipeg, and Mr. Robert Reford, of Montreal, are the members of the commission, Mr. C. N. Bell, of Winnipeg, being secretary. The Board of Trade and business men of Vancouver met the commission and presented their views with respect to improving and increasing shipping facilities from this port, making a strong point of the value of False Creek if improved by Dominion aid into a good harbor, which can easily be done.

As the commission had previously held meetings in Calgary and Edmonton, at which strong representations were made to have this port made the shipping point for Alberta grain, the Vancouver men had some strong backing in making their pleas. It was pointed out that there was a market in the Orient for all the wheat Alberta could produce, and that this was the natural point from which it would be shipped. The commission will hold another session here, when Mr. Roy, the Dominion engineer who has been surveying the basin of False Creek, is expected to be well enough to attend. In the meantime they have gone to Victoria where meetings are being held.

Reports increase in number with respect to wheat and flour export from Vancouver. A Calgary despatch credits the Ogilvie Company with the intention of establishing a flour mill at the coast, to capture the Oriental trade. Mr. J. S. Dennis, land commissioner of the C. P.R., who was in Vancouver recently from Calgary, predicts that in a short time elevators of a million bushels capacity will be erected in Vancouver to receive Alberta wheat for export. He said he believed this would occur within a year.

Latest advices from the north aver that navigation on the Yukon will close any day after October 10th. Not over 2,000 tons of Dawson-bound freight await transportation down the river from White Horse, and the bulk of the shipments have gone north from here, so that there will not be any additions of moment to the pile. If the river does not fall too low there will be no freight left over when navigation closes. As the stage of water is still at a good distance above low water for navigation, there is no fear of any blockade.

The Canadian-Australian steamer Miowera due to arrive in a few days from Australia via Fiji is bringing 900 tons of raw sugar from Suva for the British Columbia Sugar Refinery. Outbound a shipment of British Columbia apples and onions will be sent to Australia by the steamer. Some of the onions will be shipped from stock grown in the State of Washington, from seed brought from Australia. Latest advices from the Antipodes state that onions were then quoted at $120 per ton, so that there should be a profitable trade in the ship-

We Won't Like to Say "We Told You So!" But—

We have had last month very many inquiries from the trade throughout Canada with reference to the shares which we are offering the trade in Albert Soaps Limited. A goodly number of dealers have subscribed, or promised to subscribe for some shares; others are thinking it over, but from a large number who might well take some interest in this proposition we have not heard at all. Perhaps they think we are seeking their money and that the enterprise is one which will not give them satisfactory returns. Possibly they do not realize the opportunity which is being offered them.

We are about now to place this stock before the public in a general way, and from the inquiries we have already received we know it will be eagerly taken up, but we are as anxious as ever to have dealers in soap interested with us.

We want Albert Soaps Limited to be not only the most profitable concern of its kind to its shareholders in Canada, but we want its shareholders to be among those who help its success by selling its goods, but DON'T PUT OFF, it's a case of "DO IT NOW."

If the matter interests you write at once. In a few months, which will pass very quickly (you know how soon a three months' note comes due) you will be hearing of the dividends which others are receiving on this stock. We will not then say: "We told you so," but you will appreciate the point.

The soaps made by the Albert Soaps Limited are a household word throughout Canada, and the new Company is devising means to make their goods even more popular than they have been in the past.

BABY'S OWN SOAP

is steadily forging ahead of all competitors and is easily the best seller of all toilet soaps.

We see large profits ahead for those who join us now.

Every district in the Okanagan is represented with a magnificent display of fruit at the Dominion Fair at New Westminster. Vernon, Armstrong, Enderby, Kelowna, Peachland, Summerland and Penticton are to the fore with apples, pears, grapes, peaches, plums, and every variety of tree fruit, fresh, while large bottled displays of smaller fruits are shown, preserved in their natural state.

The commercial display, showing fruit packed in regulation packages and by the most approved methods, is an object lesson in more ways than one. For instance it is educating those who are still clinging to antiquated and slovenly methods of packing, that to get trade they must put up their goods in business-like and attractive style. It is also educating visitors in the knowledge that British Columbia is preparing to supply the whole Canadian west with its big requirements in fruit.

Mr. Maxwell Smith, Dominion Fruit Inspector, who has returned from a trip in the Northwest, says that the bulk of the fruit on sale in Alberta is from British Columbia. He states that jobbers there are now offering for winter apples $1.25 per box, f.o.b. British Columbia shipping points, with $1.50 for choice winter stock.

The passing of the sailing ship as a salmon carrier was marked last year. This year the canned salmon pack of British Columbia is going to the foreign markets and to the markets of the Old Country entirely in the holds of the big steam freighters. Fully half a million cases will soon be on the way to England, one vessel of the Alfred Holt line, the Keemun, taking out 140,000 cases. Other consignments go to Australia and to the Orient. The salmon is practically all shipped in coast-wise steamers to Vancouver, where it is transhipped to the holds of the big ocean-going liners.

The only sailing ship now loading or to load is the schooner Alden Besse, bought by a Japanese firm to load salt salmon and the cheaper varieties of canned salmon for Japanese trade.

Not all the pack of the Fraser River sockeyes put up by British Columbia canners will be sent forward at the present time. The big pack of Alaska pinks has caused the American packers who control that variety of salmon to slash the market in the Old Country, with the result that the canners here will hold a great part of their pack rather than further demoralize the market by hurried forwarding of the pack.

The herring run of Vancouver Island has begun at Pender Harbor where two concerns are curing and packing the fish. Kippers and other forms of cured herrings are sent to market from these plants. The run at Nanaimo which is the largest does not begin so early.

The phenomenal late run of sockeyes, continuing as it has right through the month of September, is now showing signs of abatement. As a rule the humpbacks signal the end of the sockeye run, but this season they have continued right along even though the cohoes are now running freely. The fact that many of these fish at the beginning of the late run were in fairly good condition, holding the fresh, bright color indicative of being in salt water, is claimed by some authorities in the fishing business here to show that these fish have been delayed somewhere on their usual course, and that they were not "spent fish," a few of which are usually seen late in the year, having exhausted themselves in attempts to get up the rivers.

The New England Fishing Co. steamer New England reached port from the northern halibut banks on Saturday night with 120,000 lbs. of halibut for eastern markets.

N. S. Markets.

Halifax, Oct. 3, 1905.

THE Retail Grocers' Association held a meeting during the week when a number of matters concerning the trade were considered. One of the resolutions passed was directed towards having employes of the Intercolonial Railway paid more promptly in future. The grocers claim that they are put to great inconvenience through the neglect of the authorities in not having cheques reach Halifax the first of every month. A copy of the resolution will be forwarded to the Minister of Railways, and also to D. Pottinger, the general manager, at Moncton.

The grocery trade continues good and no complaint is heard. The market at the present time may be said to be at its best. With the exception of sugar, prices are pretty steady.

Sugar—During the latter part of last week a despatch received here stated that all grades of refined sugar were marked down in New York on Friday, 20c. per hundred pounds. No announcement of a decline has yet been made in Halifax, the initiative always coming from Montreal, but there is no doubt that the New York decline will become effective in Halifax. though it may be reached by stages. No grocer in Halifax, wholesale or retail, is carrying any sugar stock worth mentioning, orders being sent in to the refineries from time to time, just as required, so that none of the dealers will suffer by this decline. The price of sugar is now $1.10 per hundred pounds less than it was at the highest figure several months ago, two drops of ten cents each having been recorded this month and there is likelihood that another is near at hand.

Dealers report much better demand for molasses, and they predict that the market will improve from now on. Handlers of this commodity here are now talking of higher prices, but the weakness of the sugar market at the present time is against an advance. The quotations are:

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, N.B., Oct. 3, 1905.

WITH the beginning of the last quarter of the year the trade may be said to be at its best. There is not the good feeling of a year ago. It is hard to pick a line showing any particular profit.

Just now there is interest in "merchants' week," which will be held during this month, and particular effort is being made that it shall be a success. It means much to get the outside buyers into the city at this time of the year.

Rice—Is being quoted quite a little higher. It is said the Japan crop is short and that the Japs are buying largely of Rangoon rice which is the grade imported here.

Spices—In general are firmer, except nutmegs, which keep very low.

Oil—In burning oil the slightly higher price lately quoted is held firm and the situation is strong.

Salt—In Liverpool coarse salt a cargo was landed this week and a large cargo is due in about fourteen days. There is a continued good demand particularly from nearby American ports, where there are very large sardine and smoked herring industries. Prices are firm. Business in fine salt is somewhat quiet.

Canned Goods—The interest mentioned last week continues, particularly on vegetables there are open prices. For many years these lines were sold so close that no money was made. They were just beginning to show a fair return when, it is said, because some were breaking their agreements in regard to prices, the situation, at least for the time, was made worse than ever.

Dried Fruit—It is expected California raisin prices will be quoted this week. It is a matter of great dissatisfaction that these prices are quoted so late. New Valencia layers have been received.

Sugar—There are extremely light stocks held. While there is no change this week in price, the trade are not buyers. Considerable English sugar was landed by the Glasgow steamer this week.

SIDE LINES WANTED.

MANUFACTURERS, Jobbers, Brokers. My specialty is specialty work. If you have anything new to place on the market, or anything old to force back on the market, or any new territory to open up in Western Canada, please communicate with me. I want to secure one or more good lines of standard goods on a time and territory contract. Have sold the grocery trade in Oregon, Washington and Idaho for 3 years. Will shortly locate in Alberta. As references as to salesmanship and reliability. Box 272, CANADIAN GROCER, 511 Union Bank, Winnipeg, Man. [41]

Lion Brand Pickles have long been known as the best keeping, appetizing, tasty bulk pickle on the market.

It has always paid merchants to handle these goods, and those who have had them once always insist on them again.

There are a good many reasons why our pickles should be the best: right soil, expert cultivation of the vegetables, most completely equipped plant in the country, cleanliness carried to the extreme, men who thoroughly know their business, whole pure spices, and a malt pickling vinegar that has no equal anywhere. Now, remember that our goods cost no more than others.

Groceries.

MONEY is still a somewhat scarce commodity in the west, and business is being transacted now in anticipation of the large sum to be put in circulation almost immediately by the marketing of the crop. It is, therefore, satisfactory to note that the crop is being marketed rapidly and that the railways will be able to move a large proportion of it before the close of navigation on the lakes. In the meantime the wholesale grocery trade is active in anticipation of a big impetus to business in coming months. Wholesalers are preparing to collect all their outstanding accounts before the end of the year, and in this they have the co-operation of the retailers. In hundreds of stores throughout the west notices are now posted up announcing that all goods will be sold for cash after November 1st, and that accounts must be paid then. Every effort is being made to take advantage of the big crop to put the prosperity of the west on a sound, substantial basis.

There are not many price changes to record this week. Some new foreign dried fruits have arrived in the city and prices are noted below.

Sugar shows no change since the declines early in September. There is a better demand for oatmeal since the decline noted last week.

Tapioca has been advanced again, the wholesale price now being 5c. per lb.

It will be another month before new evaporated apples reach the western markets. Indications point to very high prices, but it is impossible yet to state what the opening price will be.

Sugar—There is a less than normal demand from the retail trade owing to the uncertainty prevailing as to the future of the market. The trade are afraid to order on what they consider a falling market. Subject to possible changes recorded in last minute report, we quote:

FRESH AND CURED FISH

RECORD SHOAL OF FISH.

A REMARKABLE shoal of fish made appearance recently in the Courtenay Bay district. Scattered over the flats and along the eastern shore of the bay, piled up in places to a height of from two and a half feet, are to be seen thousands of barrels of fish. And although since they first appeared many have been hauled away, there are to be more than ever, as other great shoals have followed the first.

During the tide immense schools of sardine and large herring were chased by hake and haddock. These larger fish in turn were followed by dogfish, and the whole mass swam right into Courtenay Bay.

Here on the flats when the tide went out they were left. The dogfish seemingly did not come in far enough to get caught, as only one or two of them have been found. But the herring and hake are all piled up together, or scattered over the broad flats.

At one place in the cove near the Almshouse there is an area fully three hundred yards long by a hundred and fifty wide where herring, hake, haddock and some cod are piled up to an average height of two and a half feet. And extending from there down to Red Head, and up the flats beyond Crouchville, the sands are literally hidden by these millions of fish. No one over there remembers anything like it ever occurring before.

B. C. HERRING.

ALREADY a herring run is noted from Pender Harbor, where the small fish run some weeks earlier than at Nanaimo, the principal point where the herring are caught, and where the enormous run parallels the fourth year run of sockeye salmon on the Fraser River. There are two concerns now curing herring at Pender Harbor and already some of the kippers have been sent to the Vancouver market. The run at Nanaimo will this year be the signal, when it commences, for a very considerable activity in the work of curing herring.

The sockeye salmon run has taken a sudden late spurt, and though there are not the number of fish running, or many fishermen on the river and gulf, the catches have gone as high as 400 to the boat. Some of the canneries have received pretty large quantities.

The lateness of the season, and the fact that the sockeye are longer in the fresh water has some effect on the quality, and the fish now being packed are not considered the equal of those packed earlier in the season, and taken when still in salt water, or but a short time in the fresher waters of the Fraser estuary.

REMOVING A CANNERY.

The English Bay cannery is to be wiped off the map. Its site is being offered for sale, and the machinery is to be dismantled and removed to the Skeena River, where the owners will erect a cannery in time to pack next season.

The new cannery will be situated on Smith Island, at the mouth of the Skeena River, and it is expected to have the buildings in readiness to receive the plant this Fall. Work has not yet been started on Smith Island, but will be commenced shortly.

The English Bay cannery has always been a paying one, and the site is excellent. The cannery has often been able to put up two thousand cases of fish before the plants on the Fraser River have been able to put up one. One of the principal reasons for selling the English Bay plant is that when the run on the Fraser is a failure the run at English Bay is also valueless. By having a cannery in the north the chances of a small pack are lessened, as there might be a good run on the Skeena when there was a poor one on the Fraser.

FRAUDULENT PRACTICES.

The reputation enjoyed by the French sardine is the highest of any, consequently the packers of French sardines are justly indignant at an attempt which has recently been made by Spanish and Portuguese packers to pass their inferior fish off as French. The custom has been for foreigners to ship into France boxes containing 140 to 150 sardines, which are divided into boxes of smaller size and offered as French. This commerce has assumed such proportions that much uneasiness exists in the minds of those engaged in packing the genuine article. As a remedy it has been suggested that all foreign imports of sardines should have the name of the country where they are packed plainly stamped in the centre.

HAS BEEN A SUCCESS.

Dominion Fisheries Inspector Edward G. Taylor reports that the experimental introduction of eastern oysters into the coastal waters of British Columbia has at length been followed by complete success, through wise selection of waters in which to plant the importations. So far the bivalves are thriving well and promise to multiply with gratifying rapidity.

FISH TRADE WITH JAPAN.

Of the 50,000,000 people in Japan 3,000,000 are engaged in fishing, and 10,000,000 are directly dependent upon the fisheries for a living. The acquisition of half of the island Sakhalin will add to Japan's available fisheries, though not to the exclusion of western fish products from Japanese markets. Japan has already acquired a taste for Canadian canned salmon, and there will always be a market there for cheaper grades that sell from 7½ to 10 cents a tin retail. This will furnish the Pacific coast a good outlet for a considerable quantity of fish of the pink grades.

WALL PAPER ADVERTISING.

A WESTERN house which devotes one department to wall paper does some exceedingly good advertising for it. The subjoined advertisement is a sample of what may be done in this line. A department which has to do with decoration must of necessity do considerable work in educating the public up to the right standards. The heading for this ad. was Wall Paper Ideas, and it read as follows :

A prominent lady once asked a famous artist with what he mixed his paints. "With brains, madam," is the reply that has gone down in history. And so it is in decorating the home. Merely pretty papers do not make a pleasing decoration. They are only the materials a master decorator uses to produce delightfully artistic and pleasing effects for the home.

This house has long been famous both for the superiority of its wall papers and the co-operation given customers in securing decorations that prove a lasting source of satisfaction.

You will be interested in the latest ideas secured by Mr. Stoner during his recent visit in the east.

THE WALL PAPER BUSINESS.

ADVANCE sales of wall paper for Spring, 1906, are heavy. Retailers anticipate a big season, as the prosperity of the present should ensure free buying on the part of the public next year. Besides the greater variety of patterns and the general excellence of the papers, which have been put out by the Canadian manufacturers this year, promise a big season. The public is being educated up to the use of more artistic effects and finer qualities, and this all tends to the general use of better papers.

The last few seasons have shown great advances in the general conceptions of wall decoration. Formerly the only idea was to get up a paper on the wall and ceiling and a border around the top. No consideration was given to the effect such a paper would have on the general style of furnishing in the room. Much less was the question of colors worked out in a scientific or artistic way.

Now the whole subject is treated in a rational way. A scheme of colors has been developed which rests for its basis on actual observations. It is found that a red colored paper has a cheering and exhilirating effect on the mind. It is warm in tone. Hence red has been generally adopted as the most suitable color for dining rooms.

Again, it has been shown that fantastic figures in the design prevent the mind from resting. So they are being excluded from sleeping rooms, and the simplest patterns are substituted for them. Many more instances could be quoted of a similar nature to show the effect study has had in the development of wall paper fashions.

WALL PAPER IMPORTS

IT is gratifying to note that the increase in the amount of wall papers imported from foreign countries during 1904-5 over those of 1903-4 is very small. Although the total amount of wall paper consumed during the past year has greatly increased over the consumption for the same length of time two years ago, the amount imported rose from $188,330 to $199,924, a very small amount, comparitively speaking. Even this increase is referable to the better quality of paper which is now being used by the Canadian buyer, for the total number of rolls has decreased from 2,553,701 in 1903-4 to 2,408,418 in 1904-5.

ECHOES OF THE OLD COLONY.

St. John's, Nfld.

ONE of the best known "Knights of the Grip" in Canada and the United States, Colonel J. L. Block, of Royal Baking Powder fame, has been paying us his semi-annual visit. His order book shows that Royal more than holds its own.

The price of shore fish keeps up wonderfully and assures a good Fall business.

Cod liver oil is away down in price. There is a great deal of this oil left over from last year still unsold.

Large quantities of apples are brought into this country by each steamer arriving from Halifax. Prices rule high and the quality is not of the best.

The Crown Manufacturing Co., manufacturers of confectionery, baking powders, spices and aerated waters, are doing a good business in their respective lines.

W. M. Lawrence, representing Messrs. Bryant & McDonald, Halifax, has been doing good work in the city for his firm. This is Mr. Lawrence's first trip as representative for the above firm.

The Ambassador of Commerce, Jack Ryan, of the Royal Stores of this city, leaves for Canada and the States by next steamer. He will be away for a month or six weeks.

M. Aitken, of Carvell Bros., Charlottetown, P.E.I., paid his first visit to the Ancient Colony last week. He was much pleased with what he saw. Mr. Aitken thinks P.E.I. produce will be a fairly good price this fall.

A well known member of the fraternity, Mr. Edw. J. Sheldon, of Boston, has been in the city the past three weeks. Mr. Sheldon left for Labrador where he has some lumber interests. Few men who visit the island are better known than Mr Sheldon.

The duty on currants will be taken off in the near future, the Government having made an agreement with the Government of Greece to take off the duty on their products in return for that Government reducing the duty on codfish.

Thos. Smyth Co. are putting in a new department to their large business. They will make a specialty of spices, etc. It is quite evident that this is a progressive company and would seem to show the handiwork of our old friend T. T. Cartwright.

By the time these items reach your readers the well known form of J. Lister Nicholls, Gillett's representative, will have turned his back on us, well pleased with his work in this far-away land. Mr. Nicholls reports this his banner year for the company and their goods are very popular here.

J. M. Urquhart, manufacturers' agent here, is selling large quantities of "Beaver" flour these days, also of Armour Packing Co.'s goods. "Jim" is a hustler in business, as good a one at business as he used to be when chasing the puck on the ice in his palmy days as a hockeyist in Montreal.

Mr. John Messervey, of Carvell, Rallenbury & Messervey, Charlottetown, P. E.I., paid his periodical visit to us and left for the Garden of Canada by Sunday's express. Mrs. Messervey accompanied him. Judging from the broad smile on our friend's face when we shook his hand at the station he must have been well pleased with the amount of orders he took.

Mr. T. T. Cartwright, vice-president of the Thos. Smyth Co., of this city, leaves about the middle of December for Colombo. The Thos. Smyth Co. have gone into the tea business on a large scale and propose to go at the business from the very root, and are sending Mr. Cartwright to Colombo to look into the tea trade where it is grown. The company will make a specialty of Ceylon teas.

Fish cheese has made its appearance on the market and has been well received. This is a fine article and will without doubt be one of the staple articles carried by grocers and fish dealers. Put up as it is a one-pound tin equals three pounds of fresh fish. Already shipments have been made to Boston, New York and other American cities. The reports received are very flattering. Thos. Smyth Co., Limited, are the selling agents and they report sales as far in excess of their most sanguine expectations.

BEAN, CORN AND BEET REPORT.

THE following report, which has come to hand from J. B. Stringer & Co., Chatham, Ont., gives a concise statement of the bean, corn and sugar-beet crops of Western Ontario. It will be seen that a general good crop is expected.

Beans—Have had favorable weather, and the early planted are all harvested in good condition, but as about 75 per cent. were late, will take two weeks yet of favorable weather to secure. A few are threshed and although the quality is fine the yield is not large, 10 to 15 bushels to the acre, so there is promise of not more than about 70 per cent. of last year's yield, and as prices for the new crop are a little lower than last year at opening of season, farmers are not free sellers.

Corn—This crop has come on very much better than first expected of it, due of course to the unusually favorable weather. While much was planted late, and little reliance placed on it, yet it is now going to count. The crop will be no bumper one, in fact it is estimated much under a good year, but glad to say will get well ripened, something that hasn't happened to the crop for 3 years past, to the great loss of producers and shippers.

Sugar-beets—A large area of land is now given up to this crop in Essex, Kent, and Lambton, and due to a favorable season promises exceedingly well. The beets all find their way to Wallaceburg Sugar Co. by train loads and boat loads, producers realizing $5 a ton delivered on bank of river and on board cars at shipping points, with an increase if over normal percentage.

J. L. Olivier, groceries and liquors, Montreal, Que.; the assets of this business have been sold.

Precious & Co., grocers, St. Thomas, Ont.; the assets of this business have been sold to J. F. Waddell.

Alf. Bouchard, general store, St. Paul's Bay, Que., is dead. V. E. Paradis is preparing statement.

Alexander McDonald, Jr., general store, Harrigan's Cove, N.S., has assigned for the benefit of his creditors.

The Loynachan, Scriver Co., Limited, of Montreal, Que., one of the largest butter and cheese commission firms in the city, have consented to assign. A meeting of creditors is to be held, and it is likely that some satisfactory arrangement will be arrived at.

QUAKER SUGAR AND CREAM CORN

This is a line we are now packing which we intend to make our main specialty. Packed from the finest Maine Seed, with the ears all selected, with the cans well filled with corn and not watery juice. We believe there is a future for an article of this class of goods if properly placed on the market and the attention of the consumers called to its superior merits. There is no line of goods packed in cans that varies so much as corn in quality, consequently there should be an opening on the market for a really high-class article, something in which the goods were not only at the tip-top but that every can could be depended on to be of a high and uniform quality. This is what we claim for Sugar and Cream and the reputation of the Quaker is behind these assertions. While the contents inside of a can are of more importance than the outside, it may not come amiss to say that these goods are sent out in very handsome embossed wrappers, far superior to anything we have yet seen from our competitors.

GREEN FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

CALIFORNIA ORANGES.

THE orange crop of California has every prospect of equalling last year in extent of fruit. Estimates place it at about thirty thousand cars. The trees all over the producing section look uniformly in fine shape and the fruit also looks good. Movement in northern California navels will start about November 1. There are only about 100 cars left at this writing in the State of the old crop to ship.

The Redlands district will have about the same crop as last season, Riverside possibly a little less. At Glendora and Azusa the crop is a great deal heavier than last season, about 35 per cent. In other sections the crop will run on all fours with that of last year.

California orange growers are thoroughly satisfied with the results of last season, with the exception of very small growers, who only had a very few cars to market and were forced to dispose of same just at the time of the slump, but the men who could work right through the season from beginning to end were entirely satisfied with the showing made.

B. C. FRUIT CONDITIONS.

AT the present moment the shipment of apples, grapes, plums and tomatoes is going on with activity. The shipment of peaches is near an end for this season. From all points where peach trees have been set out and have matured, shipments have been very satisfactory, and the record of profits is almost universally received with scepticism. Earlier in the season it was stated that $300 and $400 per acre was realized from peach plantations at Peachland. This has been verified and the result has been duplicated in other places. At Kelowna, one acre, or to be more accurate, 90 trees which were set out on an acre, yielded a return of $500 to the owner, for the 1905 peach crop.

At Summerland and Penticton and other points along the lake as well as in the district south of the lake, peach trees are being set out and attention being given to their cultivation. So far the results have been uniformly successful. It has been demonstrated that the Okanagan is in the peach belt, not only for superior fruit, but for certainty of crop and for freedom from all the usual pests which are familiar elsewhere. The climate seems to be proof against the diseases and parasites which attack peach trees.

Last year the shipping of peaches from the Okanagan district in a commercial way was looked on as a novelty. This year it is a recognized feature of the fruit industry. Next year and thereafter, people will be wondering why they so long neglected such a sure and profitable fruit crop. The trees are in bearing four or five years after being set, out, and in this respect offer a much quicker return than the slower growing apples and plums. The market offered in the Northwest is unlimited and growing rapidly. The quality of the peaches from Okanagan is so much superior to anything from California that there is no competition.

EXPRESS CHARGES.

Many growers in the Niagara fruit districts are complaining that the express companies are making more profit on the fruit than the growers themselves.

One man with a large fruit farm, who shipped peaches to points in Ontario, has accounts which prove that the express companies received one-half the gross receipts obtained for the fruit, in addition to which the grower had to pay for the packages and the packing.

Another grower paid 15 cents per hundred pounds more for shipments at the station nearest him than at one five miles farther away from Toronto, the explanation of the express companies being thaa in the latter case they had to meet steamer competition. Some of these cases are likely to be drawn to the attention of the Railway Commission.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

Green Fruits.

Toronto, Oct. 5, 1905.

ACTIVITY has continued to be the feature of the local markets. Domestic fruits have been ruling and giving satisfaction as regards quality, with arrivals plentiful. It is expected, however, that arrivals will show decline during the coming week and that the Niagara fruit will have reached an end at an early date.

California fruits are ended as far as a commercial commodity extends. There are a few arrivals expected, but they are not considered of any consequence.

Jamaica oranges have eased somewhat. Lemons have dropped 50c.

Apples are continuing to arrive and some good specimens are on exhibition. A carlot of winter fruit recently fetched an easy price of $3.00 per barrel.

We quote:

Oranges, late Valencias, per box	5 00	6 00

Vegetables.

The vegetable market reports trade as good, but at the same time it has not equalled our previous report. Prices are ruling firm and in some instances there has been a slight advance. Tomatoes have advanced 5c. per basket, wax beans have also stiffened to 30c., marrows are commanding a high range of price, cucumbers have left the market owing to recent frost.

QUEBEC MARKETS.

Green Fruits.

Montreal, Oct. 5, 1905.

The condition of the green fruit market is tending to quietness, there are no features of any importance to note, and trade generally is only fair.

Canadian basket grapes are coming in in large quantities and meeting with ready sale.

Peaches and plums are nearly over and arrivals are few.

Almeria grapes are arriving, though the sale of same is light and there will not be any heavy demand until cold weather sets in. We quote:

Apples—Are quite high. Best stock is scarce. New Brunswick apples—that is our soft fruit—seldom sold as high as this year. Gravensteins—our best Fall apple—will be high. There is increased inquiry for western apples, but they are also high.

Oranges—Sales are small at present high figures.

Lemons—Are a small stock, full prices rule.

Bananas—Have not as large sale and are rather lower.

Peaches and Grapes (Ontario fruit)—Are quite freely offered and prices well maintained.

Pears—Are low with considerable poor fruit offered.

BISCUITS AND CONFECTIONERY

CHILDREN'S CANDIES.

WHILE it is quite generally admitted that there is more money in the sale of bob-bons and high-class confectionery, proportionately, than there is for the cheaper class of penny or gross goods, yet the quantity of the latter sold is so great as to furnish, in many cases, the larger portion of the confectioner's income. It is the latter also which demands by far the greater energy and inventive genius in their preparation. Children are very exacting customers in their own peculiar way, and demand that their candies shall always be up-to-date and seasonable. Chocolate creams and confections of a standard order retain a steady popularity year after year, but it is different with the children's candies, which must every season be offered up in a new and more pleasing shape. It matters not that exactly the same ingredients are used, it is form the youngsters look at, and this must meet with their approval. Older people may look at quality in confectionery, but children look for novelty.

The manufacture of gross goods is, in fact, a constant reproduction of old candies in new forms. "Name" is what really counts in the sale of candy, and a judicious manipulation in the use of names secures success of a new line of sweetmeats.

A NEW SUGAR.

BY the discovery of a new form of vegetable sugar, diabetics, to whom sweets are poison and bread worse than no food, will now, it is claimed, be able to enjoy some of the luxuries of life. A new compound from which sugar, bread, milk, and other articles of diet of a harmless but nourishing nature may be made, has been invented in collaboration by a Liverpool sugar expert and chemical engineer and a Liverpool doctor

At the present time saccharine is the only substance which is generally used by diabetics as sweetening material. Yet we have it on authority that saccharine has a harmful effect on people suffering from diabetes, of whom there are many thousands of all ages and conditions in this country.

The diabetic cannot assimilate carbonhydrates, and more or less of the sugar which he eats with his food, whether it be cane or beet sugar, lactose which is contained in milk, or grape sugar, is transformed into poison in his blood. The starch which forms a staple part of bread is equally injurious to the sufferer from this disease, and he tries to avoid it by desperate means. Even the bran and the almonds which he resorts to contain starch, however.

After long and hard research, the two Liverpool gentlemen alluded to think they have been successful in finding a sweetening substance which can be assimilated without injury by diabetics. It is a sort of fruit sugar, and is identical in the main constituents with honey. It is sweeter than ordinary cane or beet sugar, it is pleasant to the palate, and can be made in the form of a powder, syrup, or a solid mass, or in tablets.

The foods which can be manufactured from it would occupy an elaborate bill of fare. Bread is as necessary to the diabetic as to anyone else, and it is claimed he may be able to carve his loaf with impunity and eat pastry and sweets with a relish, which past abstention will make all the keener.

The question of cost in the manufacture of this substance is of first importance. A very similar sugar may be had of some chemists, but the difficulty of its extraction makes it prohibitive. Poor diabetics cannot afford to live on food which costs 6s. per pound. By the new process it is claimed that food can be manufactured at a cost which will bring it easily within the reach of the poorest people.

It is also claimed that the new sugar will be adopted in various industries on account of its being sweeter and more soluble than ordinary sugar.

TRANSPORT DIFFICULTIES.

HARVESTING in the Northwest Territories has proceeded apace, and the wheat is moving east at rapid rate. At Fort William it is computed that some 20,000,000 bushels of wheat will reach the Canadian elevators at Lake Superior before the close of navigation.

The transportation problem this season will be the most difficult that has ever been faced. To handle the stupendous amount of grain that must be forwarded from the present time to December 5, when the last vessels will clear from Fort William, requires not only an immense tonnage, reasonably quick loading and unloading, but, above all, an adequate supply of cars to clear the elevators at the Georgian Bay terminals.

One of the first considerations is that of elevator accommodation. At Fort William and Port Arthur the capacity is about 17,000,000 bushels, and the capacity of the receiving elevators is somewhere in the neighborhood of 6,000,000 bushels.

It is believed the Canadian navigation companies can look after their end of the work better than the railways at either end of the great lakes.

Taking into consideration the extraordinary conditions created by a crop of from ninety to one hundred million bushels, and the factors in its transportation, it would seem that the key to the situation rests largely with the railroads, which must provide plenty of cars to relieve the receiving elevators and bend their energies to systematic storage and quick loading at Fort William and Port Arthur.

The man who has closed a specific contract for delivery at a specified moment has speculated on unusual conditions that cannot be altered in a day. The task is too large and embarrassment is inevitable in many such instances. About December 10, however, when the fleets of ice-coated carriers crowd the Georgian Bay harbors with the last cargoes of the season, the situation should not present all the difficulties that now seem to crowd themselves into the vanguard of Canada's bumper crop in its march eastward.

U. S. WHEAT AND THE BOYCOTT.

It is estimated that millers on the Pacific coast will lose trade equal to fifty per cent. of their output unless the United States Government takes some action in the immediate future, which will result in a more liberal construction of the Chinese Exclusion Act.

One firm's orders for more than 100,000 sacks of flour have been canceled by Hong Kong agents within recent days, and not one sack has been sold by this firm to the territory over which the boycott extends since August 1.

The ultimate outcome of the situation must inevitably be a reduction in the price of wheat on the Pacific coast. Eastern Washington wheat is now selling for about five cents a bushel less than it would if the Chinese market had not been closed.

Sooner or later the farmer will have to face the old question of a Liverpool market, which means that wheat will sell for from forty to fifty cents a bushel instead of seventy and seventy-five cents.

B. C. OAT CROP.

Some days of extremely heavy and unexpected rain have been rather a handicap to the farmers of the lower mainland in getting in their grain. Heavy crops of oats, the principal cereal grown on the arable lands of the lower Fraser valley, have been out in stook in some cases, and there is bound to be some damage, though the fact that it came pretty late in the harvesting season has prevented as much damage as there would otherwise have been.

INTERESTING EXPERIMENT.

In order to determine the comparative quality of the different grades of the 1904 crop of Spring wheat, milling tests were undertaken at the University of Minnesota agricultural experiment station, under the direction of Professor Snyder.

Ten samples of wheat, ranging from No. 1 Northern, weighing 61 lbs. to the bushel, to "rejected" (rusted) wheat, which weighed 49½ lbs. to the measured bushel, were ground on the experimental mill at the station. The yield of flour was found to be directly proportional to the weight per bushel of the cleaned wheat.

The heavy-weight, clean and high-grade wheat yielded 68.5 per cent. of total flour and 46.6 per cent. of patent, while the rusted sample yielded only 51.7 per cent. of total flour and 40 per cent. of patent.

The amount of flour recovered was about 4 per cent. less than it would have been had an additional stand of rolls been employed, but the results were strictly comparable. The sample of rusted wheat yielded 16.8 per cent. less flour than the high-grade and soundest sample.

A MANUFACTURED FLOUR.

Artificial flour appears to be one af the latest chemical propositions. It is believed possible to chemically combine the constituents of wheat flour and so avoid the risks attendant upon the cultivation of wheat.

All artificial foods are to a large extent devoid of dietetic value, are not easily assimilated. Nature's method of organization, or order of combination is different from that of the laboratory, so that two articles may be almost identical so far as their constituents go and yet one be of value as food, the other worthless.

For example, take glucose and cane sugar. The latter is a true food, the other artificial, and we have no evidence that it is assimilated Or take sugar and saccharin. Both impart a sweet taste, but the saccharin is not of the slightest use to the system.

TOBACCO CROP CONDITIONS.

GENERALLY speaking the harvesting of tobacco in the States is progressing favorably, and it is generally conceded that the crop will turn out a good one in every respect. The unfavorable weather conditions which earlier were in evidence apparently did little general damage. At the present time housing is nearly completed.

In Pennsylvania most of the tobacco crop has now been housed. It has been got in in excellent condition and the crop is generally considered to be the best which has been secured for several years.

In Kentucky tobacco is about two-thirds cut and housed. The yield is reported somewhat under the average but quality is reported as generally satisfactory.

In Virginia throughout the tobacco belt cutting and housing is being steadily proceeded with. Many planters have finished and there are comparatively few fields remaining. The quality of the leaf is considered above the average and good cures are reported.

In North Carolina cutting and curing are still in progress in the central districts and the crop is reported in good condition. It is curing well with good color and texture. In the eastern portion curing is completed.

In Tennessee nearly the whole of the crop has been harvested in excellent weather and is now in the barns.

In Ohio the harvesting is nearly completed; curing does not show much color and the leaf is somewhat light in weight. In the low lands some crops were damaged by the weather during the month of August.

In New York State tobacco is nearly harvested and is reported in excellent condition. In some sections there is a light damage by wind and worms, but speaking generally the whole of the stock shows good quality and excellent condition.

In Wisconsin the harvest has been delayed by rain but is now nearly completed. The previous hailstorms have left their mark but the main portion escaped injury and is of excellent quality.

DOMESTIC TOBACCO.

THE Hon. Nelson Monteith, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario, on the occasion of his visit to Chatham Fair, utilized the opportunity for a tour through the southern portions of Essex and Kent, where tobacco is grown and said that he was greatly impressed with what he saw.

"I was convinced," he said, "that the tobacco industry has a future in this Province, and we propose to do what we can to help it along. I am informed that tobacco is now being cultivated in Wisconsin in a more northerly latitude than most of Ontario, and I believe that the acreage in this Province can be very greatly increased. I am assured that we can grow just as good tobacco in Ontario as they can anywhere in the States, though we may not be able to equal some of the Havana brands. The crop, though hard on the land, is a very profitable one to the farmer, who often clears after all expenses as much as $100 an acre.

"I propose to make investigations regarding seeds, cultivation, and methods of curing, with a view to placing as full information as possible before the farmers of the Province."

CUBAN TOBACCO.

Owing to the increased planting of sugar the tobacco crop in Cuba is not as large as formerly and for that reason the prices of the finer grades are bound to remain at the higher figures.

Tobacco, although not cultivated as extensively as the sugar cane, serves as a basis for two important industries, one of which is the agriculturist, who prepares and packs the weed for export and the other is the manufacturing of the millions of cigars and cigarettes consumed in the country or exported, giving employment to skilled workmen and contributing to the welfare of the laboring classes of Havana.

NOTES.

The Imperial Cigarette and Tobacco Co., Limited, St. John, N.B., recently sustained serious loss owing to a fire practically destroying their tobacco factory. The damage to stock and property is estimated at $25,000 particlly covered by insurance. The fire was extinguished in about an hour and was confined to the two top floors.

The Canada Cigar Box Co., 127 Dalhousie street, Montreal, Que., sustained loss to stock in a fire which recently broke out in their factory. Damage to the value of from $8,000 to $10,000 was caused by the outbreak. The building, which was formerly a church, was not much damaged owing to its walls being constructed of thick stone.

Oscar Silberstein, tobacco merchant, St. John, N.B., has suspended payment. It is reported that he will resume business as soon as his affairs have been straightened out. Early last season he made an extension of his business by erecting a shop at Seaside Park, his venture costing him about $800. The season, however, has been a poor one and his returns have not been up to expectations.

"ENTERPRISE" PAYS

The buzz of customers—the ring of the cash register—the clink of coin increase in a grocery store that is Enterprising in methods and equipment. An "Enterprise" Electrically Driven Coffee Mill decreases expense, increases business. A novelty a few years ago, now a necessity in every grocery. :: :: :: :: :: ::

The illustration shows our mill No. 83 fitted with ¼ H.P. motor, furnished for either direct or alternating current. It is 30 inches high, 22 inches long, 14 inches wide and weighs 115 pounds.

The nickel-plated hopper has a capacity of 4 pounds of coffee. It will granulate 1 pound of coffee a minute or pulverize ¼ pound a minute. Each machine is equipped with pulverizing grinders and can be regulated for fine or coarse grinding while running.

We will be pleased to send prices and practical suggestions; also our catalogue showing complete line of Mills, Food Choppers and other "Enterprise" grocers' specialties.

We Want You To Know

because it is to your interest as well as to ours, that the OLD HOMESTEAD brand canned

Corn and Tomatoes

we are putting up this year are positively the best ever packed in Canada.

The season has been perfect and the Picton district a veritable garden. Here we are right in the centre of it and we are putting up the choicest the garden can afford for the trade of Canada.

A standing invitation is extended to the trade to visit our factory and see the kind of goods we are putting up and the neatest factory in America.

They are positively the best, are OLD HOMESTEAD Canned Goods. There is no doubt of it. Give them a trial and you will prove their worth. Ask your wholesaler for OLD HOMESTEAD Brand. If he can't supply you write us direct.

Gold Dust Washing Powder
Fairy Soap, Copco Soap
Fairbank's Glycerine-Tar Soap
Fairbank's Scouring Soap
Fairbank's Sanitary Soap

We are willing and anxious to acknowledge the service they can render us by rewarding them in direct proportion to the interest they display in pushing these goods. Our method of rewarding is "The Fairbank Plan," which is a system of couponing our specialties in such a manner that the coupons can be easily removed when the goods are sold, and giving for these coupons useful articles, the best that money can buy. Our whole aim is to give the clerks the best value we can secure.

The products embraced in "The Fairbank Plan" are easily sold because they are the best value and give the greatest satisfaction to the consumer. They increase the trade of the store and "The Fairbank Plan" rewards the dealer or his clerks for selling them.

"AUTUMN LEAF" BRAND
CREAM SUGAR CORN

May cost more, but it is worth more. Of the thousands of cases that went out last year not one can or tin has ever been reported as poor or swelled. How many brands have that record? Now, our Process is the Maine Style, whereby the corn is cut fine and the Cream scraped from the cob, thereby the delicious flavor is retained and the corn has a creamy appearance that cannot be obtained by the old style coarse-cut. We affirm that we have to offer a few thousand cases of the Fanciest Corn ever put in this or any other country. While we have Tomatoes and Raspberries, and intend packing a full line of CHICKEN SOUPS, CATSUP, etc. We claim the "AUTUMN LEAF" BRAND Cream Sugar Corn leads all others, and Mr. Retail Grocer, it is to your advantage ten to one that you have our BRAND on sale. You are the one we wish to reach. Write us, and we will tell you how you can obtain the best line of Can Goods that is packed, and at prices, quality considered, that you ever handled. We are answering all inquiries as fast as possible. If you are looking for a cheap line of goods do not try ours. We are not in that crowd. We meet them every day that say a can is a can. Do not be mislead, you can't fool the consumer. Try the "AUTUMN LEAF" BRAND, AND YOU WILL FIND A CORN THAT WILL PLEASE THE HIGHEST CLASS OF TRADE.

REVIEW OF THE WORLD'S WHEAT CROPS

FEW exercises in statistics are of greater general interest than the estimates annually made of the world's grain crops. For many years successive Hungarian Ministers of Agriculture have taken a leading part in this useful sphere of investigation, and the care exercised by the Department at Budapest has been rewarded by remarkably close realizations of the forecasts which are consequently accepted widely as authoritative.

A year ago dismal forebodings as to a shortage of the world's cereal food supply were rife, and were hardly dissipated until the Hungarian Minister put forward his figures, which indicated that the wheat-exporting countries might have a surplus of 72,875,000 quarters to meet an estimated requirement of 69,666,000 quarters on the part of the countries which do not grow enough corn to feed their populations. Events proved that though the shortcomings in the United States harvest were conspicuous enough to justify the fears entertained before the whole field was reviewed, the increased production of Canada, India, Australia, and Argentina was on a large enough scale to bridge the gulf between sufficiency and scarcity.

In publishing his estimate of this year's crops, the Minister has revised that of 1904, which lowers the actual deficit of the importing countries to 68,100,000 quarters and the surplus of the exporters to 71,000,000 quarters. The differences between the Minister's original figures and the revised conclusions regarding last year's crops are very small indeed, and go far to confirm the reputation of the Hungarian statisticians. Their great interest in the subject arises, it need hardly be said, from the circumstance that Hungary ranks among the countries with a large exportable surplus; last year it was bracketed with Canada as fifth in that respect, the leaders being the United States, Argentina, Russia, and the East Indies. Before leaving last year's figures we may remark that of a requirement of 26,680,000 quarters by the United Kingdom, 16,100,000 quarters was adjudged to be obtainable from Canada, India and Australia.

When the detailed figures for separate countries are added, the aggregates come out at 399,326,000 quarters for 1905, against 388,600,000 quarters for 1904, which agrees with the general tone of reports from the wheat-growing centres. The countries—practically all European—which do not fully feed themselves are credited with wheat crops aggregating 109,940,000 quarters, against 107,600,000 quarters last year, and, as was expected, the only countries which show any material retrocession on the 1904 results are France, Spain and Belgium. In France the wheat was badly knocked about by the weather at a critical time of its growth, and the unpropitious surroundings of the harvest intensified the loss of quality. The crops of Germany and Austria also suffered storm damage, but in each case the yield has improved on the 1904 standard, in spite of this unfortunate experience, which was common to a great part of the continent. The United Kingdom is credited with 7,682,000 quarters, against 5,800,000 quarters last year, an increase of over 32 per cent., which renders it a little more self-supporting than in recent years, but still leaves it dependent for nearly three-fourths of wheat consumption on oversea sources. Thanks to the growth of population, the deficit of the importing countries is enlarged from 68,100,000 to 69,644,000 quarters, but England's shortcoming is estimated at 26,680,000, against 27,800,000 quarters last year; so that, relatively, it is much better off in this respect.

Looking now at the exporting countries, we find the Hungarian Minister putting their aggregate wheat yield at 289,386,000 quarters, an advance of 8,386,000 quarters on last year's corrected estimate. All, and more than all, this gain, is attributed to the American continent, which is allowed 84,410,000 quarters, against 72,700,000 quarters, or nearly one-sixth more than last year's deficient crop. This closely coincides with the generally-accepted estimate.

Russia, which ran the United States close last year, is now a long way behind, but the Hungarian estimate of 69,690,000 quarters, against last year's 70,200,000 quarters, would seem to dispose authoritatively of the exaggerated reports of impending scarcity throughout Russia. Of course, the incompleteness of the system of communications in Russia frequently has the result of preventing the transference from centres where grain is plentiful of supplies which are urgently needed in less favored portions of the Empire. Strangely enough, the smaller Russian crop of this year is held sufficient to provide an exportable surplus of 12,650,000 quarters, against 9,700,000 quarters a year ago.

As in 1904, India stands third in the list of exporting countries, though not of actual exporters; for the latter position belongs to Argentina, which ships two-thirds of her wheat, while India sends away only a small fraction of her total production. The Indian figures have, of course, been ascertained with considerable exactitude, as the crop is reaped when wheat is being sown or is only sprouting in most other grain countries, and the Hungarian figure of 34,592,000 quarters, against 43,700,000 quarters last year, adheres closely to the Calcutta Statistical Department's calculation of a falling off of 77,721,000 bushels, of which eight go to the quarter.

Hungary comes fourth among the world's wheat producers, and, in connection with Croatia and Slavonia, has a crop of 21,252,000 quarters, against last year's 18,400,000.

Argentina has enlarged her wheat production from 16,600,000 to 19,320,000 quarters; it was only 11,800,000 in 1903 so that there has been an increase not far short of 50 per cent. in two years—a circumstance which goes far to account for the enhanced value of British investments in Argentina railways and other undertakings.

Canada makes slower progress, for her wheat crop is put at 12,420,000 quarters against 12,000,000 last year; but there will certainly be a vigorous stride when the land recently broken up comes into bearing and the extension of railways brings additional acreage into cultivation.

Australia yields 7,084,000 quarters, against 7,800,000. The most astonishing advance of all is made by Roumania, which has the great crop of 9,890,000 quarters to atone for the poor 5,400,000 of 1904.

With an increase of 8,386,000 quarters in their estimated production, the exporting countries are expected to have 68,448,000 quarters of surplus wheat, against 71,000,000 last year; so that they will, apart from accumulated stocks, not quite cover the European deficiency if the Hungarian statistics prove approximately accurate. The exportable surplus from British possessions aggregates 11,960,000 quarters, or about 43 per cent. of the amount England must import. The fact that the populations of these possessions are able to consume a greater proportion of their wheat accounts largely for this diminution of their capacity to feed the Mother Country; but in itself it points to distinct growth of local prosperity.

SAUCE CAMPAIGN.

Holbrooks, Limited, manufacturers of Worcester Sauce of that name, have opened up a branch office at 28 Front street east, Toronto. The success which this company has received since the commencement of the year, when their sauce was introduced to the Canadian market, has encouraged them to launch out in a more substantial manner. Mr. H. Gilbert Nobbs has just returned to Canada from England, and will continue this vigorous campaign of advertising and sampling. Their idea appears to be to thoroughly work Eastern Canada before going to the Northwest. Mr. V. D. Stead has come over with Mr. Nobbs, with the intention of representing them among the retail trade of Toronto.

FACTORY RUNNING OVERTIME

The immense demand for RISING SUN STOVE POLISH and SUN PASTE STOVE POLISH keeps our enormous factory running overtime, and the wheels are now turning fourteen hours a day. The superior quality of our product does it. The largely-increased sales of both goods this year over corresponding period last year warrant us in claiming that every retailer will find it to his interest to push vigorously the sale of both RISING SUN STOVE POLISH and SUN PASTE STOVE POLISH. They please the consumer.

NOTES WORTH NOTING.

REGINA is to have one of the largest sugar refineries in the west. The B.C. Sugar Refinery Co. intend erecting a plant at Regina. Tenders are expected to be closed shortly. It is proposed to have the plant in operation before January 1st. Tenders call for a plant larger than anything in the west, barring British Columbia property, and it will be the distributing point for sugar for the Northwest.

The reduction works established at Canso, N.S., for the conversion of dog fish into commercial products are kept fully employed, and are turning out eighty tons of material daily.

A single "Ideal" packing machine in the "Salada" Tea Co.'s packing room packed 15,000 pounds of tea in the first three days of this week. This was in pound packages, the usual electrical weighing machine doing the weighing.

The merchants of Jamaica have decided to send a delegate to appear before the Tariff Commission in regard to the duty on sugar. It is asserted that the island is not getting any advantage from the Canadian preference. The Canadian manufacturer gets it all.

An almost miraculous haul of fish has just been made at Looe, Cornwall. The quantity was so great that it was impossible to draw the net up on the beach as usual. The net was secured until the fall of the tide. It was then found that 60,000 fish, weighing from twelve to fourteen tons, had been taken.—London Chronicle.

The vegetable growers of the Province of Ontario have reported to the Agricultural Department that they are of the opinion that no efforts should be taken to have the tariff increased on such vegetables as are needed by the working classes. They, however, think that there should be an increase in the tariff on such articles as lettuce, cucumbers, and early tomatoes, which are to be regarded as luxuries.

The London Dairymen's Pure Milk Protective Association has been formed, with these officers: President, H. W. Aylesworth; vice-president, George Saul; secretary, Ernest Phoenix; treasurer, P. F. McClary; executive committee, H. W. Aylesworth, R. M. Berry George Tupholme. The object of the association is to protect the milk supply, and prosecute all persons found using formaldehyde or other preservatives.

The total amount of Niagara fruit received in Toronto by rail and water during September, was 1,373 tons. Of this, 628 tons came by boat and 745 tons, or 87,566 packages, by train. Of these receipts and of fruit previously stored here, 89 carloads, or 1,135 tons, were shipped out by the wholesale houses to the Provincial trade. In August, 1,021 tons were shipped to Toronto, 358 tons by boat and 663 by rail. The total shipments received by rail this year are 1,932 tons, an increase of 135 tons over last year.

Representatives of the fruit growers of British Columbia, appearing before the Tariff Commission, were keenly anxious to have all duties on fruit retained and some of them increased. The claim was made that British Columbia had fruit land enough to supply all the fruit required for the west. Exception, however, has been taken to this statement. It is stated that if both Ontario and British Columbia will bend their energies to sending the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta, good fruit well packed and at proper seasons, they need never worry about tariff.

A note from Victoria states that much interest is being created on the mainland by the discovery of a new fruit, which, after investigation, was found to be a mangomelon, which, however, was never known to grow in this country before, but it is regarded as a luscious fruit in the Hawaiian Islands, where it is cultivated to a great extent and exported. The ones raised were grown by Wm. Ashbury of East Delta, quite by accident. They have come up along with a patch of muskmelons which he had planted in the Spring, and the seeds of the mangomelon must have been mixed with the other seeds. Even the grower did not know what they were and brought a box of them to town to find out. They are of good flavor and thoroughly ripe, but not nearly so large as the ones grown in southern climes.

Mr. Thomas Macfarlane, chief analyst of the Canadian Government, has completed the examination of 60 samples of black peppers and 86 samples of white peppers. Of this number only 40.7 per cent. were found to be undoubtedly genuine and 47.7 per cent. were proved to be adulterated. The collection of samples was made all over the Dominion. Wheat flour was found to be a common ingredient of adulterated commodity. Other foreign substances which deteriorate the peppers were maize starch, stone cells and wheat starch. Where the peppers were found to be impure the percentage of foreign substances ranged from one to sixteen per cent. The peppers were obtained in February last at the request of Hon. Mr. Brodeur, who is conducting a vigorous campaign to suppress the adulteration of food.

The analysts of the Inland Revenue Department, Ottawa, have recently completed an examination of jams, jellies, and marmalades offered for sale in Canada, which goes to show that in spite of the warning that was given to these industries last season, adulteration still prevails to an alarming extent. Of all the samples together 66 per cent. contained glucose, 15 per cent. preservatives, and 30 per cent. dyes. Thirty-three per cent. were pronounced genuine.

Out of 55 samples of black currant, gooseberry, peach, plum, raspberry and strawberry jams, only 12 were found genuine. Forty-three contained glucose, three preservatives, and three were dyed. Twenty-nine samples of marmalades were taken altogether, of which thirteen were found genuine, sixteen contained glucose, one preservative, and three were dyed. Out of fourteen samples of jelly, only eight were pronounced genuine, six containing glucose, three preservatives, while three were dyed. The preservatives used were benzoic acid and salicyclic acid.

Mr. J. F. Shoemaker, representing A. Colburn Co., of Philadelphia, was met by The Grocer in Montreal this week. Mr. Shoemaker was not soliciting business, as owing to the imposition of the Commercial Travelers' Tax he did not feel like taking chances of being "jugged" or held up. Mr. Shoemaker's opinion of the Quebec Commercial Travelers' Tax Act will not bear printing, and he, like hundreds of other travelers representing United States houses, will be forced hereafter to give Montreal a wide berth. As Mr. Shoemaker explained, this absence of American travelers will be a serious loss to the hotels and railways, and so directly to the Province. American houses will not do much less business, but it will be done by correspondence, or their representatives in Ottawa and Toronto.

NEW COMPANIES.

PROVINCIAL charter has been granted to the Russell Bottling Works of Ottawa, Limited, the share capital of the company to be twenty thousand dollars divided into ten thousand shares of two dollars each, the head office of the company to be at Ottawa and the provisional directors of the company to be Albert Osias Rochon, William George Thomson, Telesphore Rochon, Omer Joseph Rochon and Minnie Thomson.

Provincial charter has been granted to the Robson Leather Company, Limited, Oshawa, Ont., the share capital of the company to be one hundred thousand dollars divided into one thousand shares of one hundred dollars each, the head office of the company to be at Oshawa and the provisional directors of the company to be Charles Norman Robson, Frank William Robson and Thomas Thorsby.

Provincial charter has been granted to the Port Colborne Milling Co., Limited, Port Colborne, Ont., the share capital of the company to be forty thousand dollars divided into four thousand shares of ten dollars each, the head office to be at Port Colborne and the provisional directors of the company to be Joseph Phillips Hanham, Samuel T. McColl, Alexander Crawford Mitchell, John Daniels Kinnaird, and Otto Carl Nathaniel Kanold.

NEW COFFEE ROASTER.

An expensive addition has been made by Codville & Co., of Winnipeg, to the machinery of their spice and coffee mill. This is a new coffee roaster with a capacity of 800 lbs. per hour, which this firm have just imported from New York. The new roaster, manufactured by the Fraser Manufacturing Co. of New York, is the latest of its kind and it is an important addition to the plant in the Codville factory.

CANADIAN GROWN COFFEE.

It will be noted with interest that an attempt to grow the coffee plant in this country has met with success.

Mr. Gamble, of Lancaster, announced in Ottawa last Winter that he intended making experiments along this line. Last May he planted some beans, and says they have had nothing but ordinary care, such as being frequently hoed and kept clear from weeds; now he is the possessor of a strong, healthy plant, about 4 feet high, containing quite a large quantity of beans. Mr. Gamble is gardener for Mr. McBean of Lancaster, and is very pleased with the result of his work, and everyone will agree that he has good cause to be.

CHEESE IN GREAT BRITAIN.

A matter which is worthy of attention, is that the total consumption of cheese in Great Britain is, and has been for some years, almost at a standstill. There are various reasons for this, but the chief doubtless is that such lines as canned goods, patent foods, jam, etc., have come into far more general use than fifteen or so years ago, particularly amongst the lower classes. It is a curious fact that while the United States exports of cheese have materially fallen off, their shipments of canned goods have increased, so that by increased exports of one line of goods they are making up for the falling off in another line, which falling off is probably caused in some degree by the increased export of canned goods or similar lines. This is an interesting phase of economic law.

CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN

Montreal, Oct. 12, 1905.

THE situation on cheese remains practically unchanged. Colored, for some reason or other, are in very strong demand and they are selling at a considerable premium over white cheese at the present moment, but the latter received a very fair share of attention on the market and as the consumption of white cheese in Great Britain is very much in excess of the consumption of colored cheese, we may at any moment see the present condition reversed.

There is less risk in carrying white cheese for any length of time as the colored goods may fade and become "mottled" in color, which is a very serious fault and means heavy losses if it occurs. However, there is a certain demand for colored cheese and if there is a scarcity, as there seems to be at present, it results in buyers paying a premium over white cheese. Last Winter the reverse was the case, when white brought a substantial premium over colored goods.

All the country markets remain very firm, in spite of the assertion that most Ontario sections show now a considerable increase in the make as compared with the same time a year ago. This is partly due to the excellent condition of the pastures owing to the continued fine weather, and partly due to the extra feeding of the stock. On account of the prevailing high prices of both cheese and butter it pays the farmers this year to feed their cows to get more milk, and they are doing it.

While Ontario will probably show an increased make of cheese, it is different in Quebec. For various reasons the quality of cheese made in Ontario is of a higher grade than the article made in the Province of Quebec, while butter made in Quebec is undoubtedly of a very much better quality than the butter made in Ontario. The result is that Quebec is going more and more into butter, and naturally the production of cheese becomes less in proportion. If, therefore, the make of cheese in Ontario shows an increase, there is a corresponding falling off in the production of this article in Quebec, and taking the two Provinces together there is probably a decrease in the production of cheese this year.

There is a natural desire on the part of operators to get prices down to a safer basis for the purpose of carrying goods through next Winter, but so far all efforts in this direction have failed and now if those who carry stocks on their own account want to get a profit out of the business, they must very soon commence to ask higher prices for their holdings, which means that we must get advancing markets both in Canada and the United Kingdom.

Mr. J. A. Ruddick, the Dominion Dairy Commissioner, has just returned from an extended tour of inspection through the various dairy centres of Europe and the different markets in Great Britain. Mr. Ruddick finds, what has been pointed out in these articles before, that our Canadian butter compares most favorably in quality with the best goods produced in Europe and is better than many. He has inspected our goods in their fresh condition and compared them with the best Danish butter in the British markets, and in one case, at least, he acknowledged the Canadian article to be fully as good as the Danish. Yet it remains a fact that Canadian butter is retailed at a much lower price than Danish, which proves that our goods are only sold as a second class quality. It is undoubtedly put into the second class by not putting it out in its fresh condition to the consumer. Now, why should the Canadian product be used for speculation, when the goods from other countries, notably from Denmark, are sold in their fresh condition? No doubt Mr. Ruddick is doing most excellent work to advance the interests of the Canadian dairy industry. He has shown himself a capable executive and he has done much good. It may not be within his power to change this existing evil of speculation in our product, but perhaps something might be done to lessen it and get the British retailer to insist on getting our fine butter in as fresh a state as it can be landed in the different ports of the United Kingdom.

The market for butter shows very little change. The outlook is decidedly "bullish." Exports are still keeping up, which means a constant reduction in our supplies and we need quite a good deal of butter for our own use during the Winter months.

LONDON PRODUCE LETTER.

By Our Own Correspondent.

A BRIEF review of the British cheese market should not be without interest to Canadians. Indeed, when they look back over the past ten or twelve years and see how, with but occasional variations, their exports of cheese to the Mother Country have increased from 59,423 during the year (ending June 30) 1896 to 92,308 tons during the same period of 1905, they will be able to understand how strong is this commercial bond between them and their brothers in the Old Country.

This great increase of 32,885 tons might not carry with it so great a proof of Britain's indebtedness to Canada, were it a fact that supplies of cheese from other sources had shown a proportionate or even nearly proportionate increase. But they have not. The knowledge that, while other countries have actually lost ground, or remained stationary, in their cheese supplies to Britain, Canada has steadily advanced, must be a source of something more than satisfaction to Canadians. To-day the Dominion stands out as far and away the largest supplier of cheese for the British markets, and she has secured for herself in this line a position which need fear no competition, even were competition likely. But it is not. Canadian cheese has a reputation with the general public and stands more on its merits with that body of the people than does Canadian butter, which, at any rate by name, is unknown to them. The retailers here do not expose Canadian butter with a notice to the effect that it is "new arrival, Canadian," or any publicity of that nature, but they do for Canadian cheese.

There are five other countries which ship cheese to this market, viz., New Zealand, Belgium, Holland, France and the United States. During one or two years attempts were made by concerns in Australia to work up a cheese trade, but without success. Eventually the effort was abandoned and the last eighteen months have seen no Australian cheese on this side.

New Zealand supplies of cheese have never exceeded 4,200 tons, and her progress, though in the right direction, has been very gradual and varied from 2,974 in 1896 to 4,072 tons in 1905 (ending June 30). The efforts to retain trade have not been easy, and the increase during the past five years has been only 114 tons. It is, of course, in butter that bility such cheese is registered on this market.

Supplies of cheese from the United States to this market have shown a very heavy deficiency of late years, falling from 28,034 tons in 1901 to 9,387 tons in 1905. During the five years previous to that they had increased from 25,744 tons to 32,183 tons. During the Winter, when most Canadian ports are icebound, Canadian cheese is sometimes shipped via New York, and in all probability such cheese il registered on this market as United States produce.

Dutch cheese, which is now arriving in slightly larger quantities than from the States, is also slowly declining. Last year (ending June 30, 1905) the amount received on these markets was 10,697 tons as against 14,431 tons in 1896.

Belgian cheese is falling off. French is just about where it was ten years ago, but supplies from both these countries are comparatively small, and do not play any important part on the British market.

It will be seen from the foregoing brief summary that Canada is about the only country that is showing real progress in the matter of cheese export to this side, and stands far above all others. According to returns, the following are figures of her cheese shipments to Britain:

	Tons
1900	70,549
1901	77,267
1902	76,297
1903	87,883
1904	98,306
1905	92,308

Canadian cheese has been selling well, and to-day's (Sept. 30) quotations are 56 to 57 shillings, but there is very little at 55 shillings.

PROVISION AND DAIRY MARKETS.

TORONTO.

Steady demand continues to be manifested in the provision lines.

Hogs are coming in rather slowly and prices are well maintained at previous quotations. Stocks as pointed out in our previous issue are greatly depleted and there is scarcely anything to draw upon; arrivals are only coming in in barely sufficient quantities to meet the current requirements.

Bacon has firmed and shows a distinct tendency to advance.

Barrel pork can scarcely be found on the market.

Lard continues very firm with still an upward tendency.

Beef has eased off somewhat and shows slight declination. All other prices continue very firm at previous quotations.

Cheese— General conditions of the cheese markets might well be described as weak. The board reports during the current week have shown a tendency on the part of buyers to slacken off in their bidding with the result that many boards report offerings unsold and where sold there is frequently shown a weakening in price. This rather tends to a more healthy state of the existing market as prices are generally conceded to be on too high a basis to encourage any material bulk trade. Export trade has the tendency to improve, but meets with somewhat of a set off in the lower basis of prices in the American cheese. Until, therefore, the market assumes a steadier footing export trade is not expected to assume any serious dimensions.

Provisions—There is quite an active sale at this season. In pork, local mess is very scarce and American is high. Clear now covers such a wide range in quality it is hard to set a value, but prices are firm.

Beef shows little change.

Pure lard is still high and packers have little to sell. Refined lard keeps low.

Smoked meats move more freely and prices are firm.

In fresh beef prices keep low with but a fair sale.

Lamb is still an active line and holds at quite full figures. Mutton and veal are quiet.

Pork, while more freely offered, is firm. We quote:

MONTREAL.

The provision market has shown a weakness this week owing to accumulation of stock and prices are easier in lines. Live hogs are easier and have declined about 12 1-2c. per 100 lbs. Fresh killed abattoir dressed hogs quoted $9.50. Hams and bacon are in good supply and selling only fairly well. We quote:

ST. JOHN, N.B.

Provisions—There is quite an active sale at this season. In pork, local mess is very scarce and American is high. Clear now covers such a wide quality it is hard to set a value, but prices are firm.

Beef shows little change.

Pure lard is still high and packers have little to sell. Refined lard keeps low.

Smoked meats move more freely and prices are firm.

In fresh beef prices keep low with but a fair sale.

Lamb is still an active line and holds at quite full figures. Mutton and veal are quiet.

Pork, while more freely offered, is firm. We quote:

Mess pork, per bbl	$15 00 $20 50

FISH POACHING.

IT is with a degree of satisfaction that every Canadian will note the latest development in the situation with regard to fish poaching on Lake Erie. From the outset it was a most deplorable occurrence, as it appears not to have been an isolated or casual occurrence, but has developed into almost an organized system of trade robbery.

From accounts to hand it would appear that the system was a most complete one and was being practised by a veritable fleet of fishing tugs, the scheme employed being to place one of the fastest boats at the head of the line on the lookout and if this boat was seen to speed away at a high rate of speed it was taken as a signal that they were spotted by the Vigilant, and the whole fleet steamed away for their own waters, often accompanying this proceeding by a general tooting of their sirens in token of derision.

The American authorities must have been fully aware of what was being done; such a proceeding, done in such an openhanded flagrant manner, could not fail to have been fully known by all parties concerned and we can only suppose it would have still continued had it not been for the drastic measures taken by the cruiser Vigilant, which has certainly not belied her name.

The serious effect that poaching of this nature has upon the Canadian fisheries is ample excuse, if excuse were necessary, for resorting to the severest methods to stop such proceedings. Canada has been facing in a very real way at the present time the question of maintaining in a satisfactory and healthy way the many fisheries which she has under her control. These industries are of national importance and to have allowed such gross violation of the fishing boundaries would be the removal of the advantages which it is sought to obtain by the annual replenishing of our fisheries and would have resulted in the benefits which accrued really missing their mark and falling into the hands of the American poachers.

The latest news, however, is particularly satisfying to those most concerned in this unsatisfactory business, for we hear that the United States Government has taken what promises to be effective action for the suppression of the poaching of American fishermen in Canadian waters. A revenue cutter in charge of the collector of customs at Cleveland has been sent on a cruise with instructions to seize fishing tugs, inspect their cargoes and confiscate both cargoes and vessels belonging to violators of the law.

It is not likely that tug owners will care to attempt the feat of evading both the American and Canadian cruisers. This action is really in the interest of humanity, for lives have already been sacrificed and others may at any time be taken in the event of a poaching vessel trying to avoid seizure by sailing away.

It would further tend to promote good feeling between neighbors and to improve the supply of fish for both nations if there could be secured by some joint action some more effective means of protecting the fish from senseless destruction. Apparently the responsibility for the present unsatisfactory safeguards rests on the people of the United States and now that they have been stirred into effective activity by the danger of international complications over loss of life and property, it should be not too much to expect them to become wide awake to their own interests.

AN AMERICAN AND TORONTO.

SOME interesting remarks have been made by a leading New York business man who has visited Toronto after an absence of some fifteen years. He expressed great satisfaction at the manner in which Toronto had grown from an architectural standpoint. The city was being cared for in a most praiseworthy manner, both as regards its "layout" and also with regard to its buildings. He says, however, that what he was mainly struck with, was the immense advance which had been made commercially.

There has been most radical change in the manner and methods of local merchants. When last here he had to resort to the most diplomatic of methods, and even after the many delays of red tape and reserve had been overcome, there was still at that time a cold and freezing atmosphere surrounding a Toronto merchant's office.

To-day he finds all this changed. The heads of the leading firms are more accessible and discuss business matters with a freedom unknown fifteen years ago. Methods are more up-to-date in making a deal, and courtesy and hospitality are very much in evidence.

As an instance, he cites his experience in being invited into the private office, offered a cigar, and being entertained at the club in a princely manner, while on his last visit he dare not smoke in the presence of the principal of the firm, and was kept waiting outside the private office and very curtly answered when inquiring if any of his line of goods was needed.

The New Yorker says that the business methods of the leading Toronto houses are now conducted on lines similar to those of the American cities, and that this marked change is attributed to the new blood that has been introduced into the old established firms, and that modern ideas are practiced by the younger men at the head of the houses now doing business.

THE IMPORTER AND THE TARIFF.

IT is to be hoped that during the investigation into the tariff which is now being made the interests of the importer will not be overlooked.

When a case is before a court of law all parties interested are called upon to give evidence. The importers of this country are interested in the Customs tariff, and their evidence should certainly be taken.

Canada is a protectionist country. Nine-tenths of the people believe that at least a moderate tariff is necessary to the welfare of the Dominion. But in preparing a Customs tariff the interests of all should be considered. The manufacturers, the lumbermen, and the agriculturists of different kinds are being heard, but the merchant—the man who distributes merchandise wholesale and retail—does not seem to have an existence. And yet he has interests to consider and rights to guard.

The tariff needs revision, and it is presumptive evidence that the Government thinks so, too, or it would not be holding the present investigation. But while the work is being done it might as well be done well. And the only way it can be done well is to first consider and carefully weigh the interests of all concerned, and from the evidence thereby adduced, and the knowledge thereby attained, construct a tariff that will protect the interests of the merchant who imports and sells as well as those of the manufacturer who makes.

Boards of trade and mercantile organizations in general should give this matter their prompt attention.

PROVINCIAL TAXES RETARD COMMERCE.

FREQUENT comment has been made in these columns on the arbitrary and near-sighted policy of Provincial Legislatures, in taxing commercial travelers. Additional light which has been shed on the matter, has only served to accentuate the impression that these taxes are entirely unwarranted, and are, in spirit, though possibly not in letter, an infringement on the rights of the Federal Government, and an insult to the good sense of the nation.

On Prince Edward Island rests the blame for initiating this class of legislation. A tax of $25 was imposed on all commercial travelers visiting that Province, and the money-making possibilities of the scheme immediately appealed to the hungry legislators of British Columbia. But in this case, the tax was doubled, every traveler selling goods in the western Province being relieved of no less than $50. Then the Quebec Cabinet, frenzied by their endeavors to make ends meet and thinking that they should be able to go their sister Provinces one better, proposed and carried through the iniquitous statute which forbids traveling representatives of foreign houses from doing business in the Province, except on payment of a $300 tax.

When this last piece of legislation was perpetrated, a storm of protest went up from all over Canada. So strong was popular opposition to such insular enactments that many representations were made to the Dominion Government, praying for an exercise of the right of veto granted by the British North America Act. The British Columbia tax was made the subject of a test and the Minister of Justice was asked to report on its validity, his finding, recently made public, is that the statute is within the rights of the Province to pass it, and, as a result, the Government has declined to interfere.

Where is this thing going to end? Will other Provinces too fall victims to the taxing mania, and keep on increasing the amounts, as has already been done? It is quite conceivable that these might become so high as to be prohibitive, and an obvious interference with Federal rights.

Under the circumstances, it is only to be expected that, in Britain and the United States, uncomplimentary references are being made to Canadian statesmanship. In the States, there are many firms who, if they could work the territory without so many restrictions, would make a connection in Canada sufficient to justify their investing in a Canadian plant eventually. As it is, they are losing confidence in the ability of Canadian legislators, and we have been advised that one large firm are withdrawing their plans to invest nearly half a million dollars in Canada, owing to the bad impression that the recent enactments have made.

No objection is made by foreign manufacturers to a legitimate tariff; but the numerous petty restrictions being imposed upon them has naturally aroused great antagonism.

In view of the Dominion Cabinet's decision to make no move in the matter, and the avowed intention of the Quebec Treasurer to enact an even more comprehensive statute, it behooves the business men of Canada to demand purely Federal control of the nation's trade and commerce. This we believe to be the feeling of the vast majority of Canadian merchants, and to this opinion, if properly expressed and conveyed, the Government must needs bow.

IT HAS NEARLY EXPIRED.

Only a few days more and the new venture of The MacLean Publishing Company, The Business Magazine, will see the light. That means that the remarkable offer made to THE GROCER'S subscribers a week ago will only hold good for those few days. If you are a subscriber to THE CANADIAN GROCER you should not omit this opportunity to get the new publication for half the published price—that is for one dollar per annum. Send in your name at once to

THE MacLEAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

A CUSTOMS DUTY PROBLEM.

AN interesting feature has recently occurred in the administering of the customs law, and one which opens up a question of importance to the import merchant who buys goods for future delivery.

Some time, round about May of this year, a prominent broker placed an order in England for a quantity of goods, to wit, candied peel, at the then market price, for delivery in September and October. Since the order was given prices have materially advanced on these lines, and in keeping with the law which regulates the fixing of duty charges, and which specifies that it shall be "at the price ruling at time of exportation," the customs officer insisted upon payment of duty on the "present" market price, ignoring altogether the invoice which gives the actual price paid.

This obviously places the broker in an awkward position. He has placed most of these goods at prices which calculated the duty on the actual price paid, and is out in his profit to the extent of the difference.

It can be easily seen that if this rule is to be unduly forced an injustice is likely to occur at any time, as it is practically impossible to anticipate what fluctuations may occur at a distance of several months; and might very easily make just the difference between a profit margin and actual loss.

INEFFICIENT CRATING.

A GOOD deal of carelessness seems to be manifest in the manner in which many goods are packed for transit. The position of the shipper in a wholesale firm is by no means a sinecure. To fill that post successfully a man should be selected in every way efficient. Quite recently there has come to our knowledge several instances in which trouble and inconvenience have been caused which might easily have been avoided if the packer had exercised a very ordinary amount of care.

The most recent case is one in which a grocer in the Niagara Peninsula received some crates of preserving jars of which quite a quantity reached their destination broken and cracked. It is true that on application he received due allowance for the breakage but why such an occurrence should happen is beyond conception. These jars were packed in cardboard which was altogether too weak and small. Stiffer cardboard which would reach from end to end of the jar would have effectually prevented this loss. It is certainly a foolish policy which in order to save the few cents on card will make it possible to destroy a quarter of the contents, as it did in the case under review.

Shoal Lake section.—Shoal Lake, Newdale, Strathclair, Kelloe and Salisbury. Secretary, C. E. McGrath of Western Trading Company.

Birtle section. — Birtle, Foxwarren, Rossburn, Binscarth and Russell. Secretary, H. A. Manwaring, Birtle.

In addition to the list of association sections mentioned in a previous issue Secretary Coulson informs The Canadian Grocer of the organization of the following local organizations:

Cartwright section—Cartwright, Mather and Holmfield. R. F. Moore, Cartwright, secretary.

Killarney section.—Killarney and Ninga. Mr. McCulloch of Marquis & McCulloch, secretary.

Boissevain section.—Boissevain and Whitewater. J. D. Baine, Boissevain, secretary.

Deloraine section.—Deloraine and Medora. S. K. Colhoun, secretary.

Carnduff section.—Carrievale, Carnduff and Gainsboro. J. H. Elliott, Carnduff, secretary.

Melita section.—Melita, Elva and Pierson. W. Hamelin, of Hamelin Bros. & Co., Melita, secretary.

Alameda section.—Alameda, Oxbow, and Glenewen. R. C. Gibson, Alameda, secretary.

Estevan section.—Bienfaite and Estevan. Arthur Kelly, Estevan, secretary.

Virden section.—Virden, Lenore, Reston, Sinclair, Redvers, Antler, Hargrave, Routledge and Pipestone. E. J. Scales, Virden, secretary.

Secretary Coulson covered a big expanse of territory during the first week in October and the result is some further gratifying additions to the membership list and the organization of a thriving new section with Virden as its centre. During the week he visited the trade in the following towns: Marquette, Reaburn, Antler, Reston, Redvers, Pipestone, Deleau, Finlay, Alexander, Griswold, Oak Lake, Routledge, Hargrave and Virden. In some of these towns only the preliminary organization work has been done and it will be necessary to visit them again in the near future.

The net result of the week's work was the addition to the membership list of the following names:

Virden.—F. Palmer, J. R. Duke, H. D. Crowe, B. Meek, M. R. Schurman, McLellan & English, Clingan, Scales & Wilcox, F. Higgins.

Lenore.—Carscadden Bros., A. Fulcher.

Reston.—Paul Bros., J. Munro Co., Limited.

Sinclair.—Smith Bros., J. Williamson.

Redvers.—R. Ferguson, R. Curle, J. M. Lauders.

Antler.—McAllister & Hunter, W. Cavanagh.

Hargrave.—Geo. Halliday & Co., H. Cutfield.

Routledge.—H. Moody.

Pipestone.—McNicholl & Pitt, A. L. Bridgett.

On Friday night, October 6th, a very successful organization meeting was held in Virden at which a section bearing the name of that town was formed to include the towns of Virden, Pipestone, Routledge, Hargrave, Antler, Redvers, Sinclair, Reston and Lenore. All the Virden merchants attended with the exception of F. Higgins, who was unavoidably absent, and Secretary Coulson held proxies from most of the merchants in the towns not represented. As indicating the interest which is taken in the association work it is worthy of note that one dealer, S. S. Carscadden of Lenore, drove 27 miles to attend the meeting. General regret was expressed at the unavoidable absence of F. W. Clingan of Virden, a member of the central executive, who was unfortunately out of town. The firm of Clingan, Scales & Wilcox was represented, however, by E. J. Scales. Those present at the meeting were: S. S. Carscadden, Lenore; H. Cutfield and Geo. Halliday, Hargrave; B. Meek, E. J. Scales, M. R. Schurman, H. D. Crowe, F. Palmer, J. R. Duke, and Messrs. McLellan and English of the firm of that name, Virden; Secretary W. A. Coulson and F. R. Munro, of The Canadian Grocer, Winnipeg.

Secretary Coulson presided and in a brief speech he explained his object in calling the meeting and outlined the work which the association is doing in other towns and sections. It was his hope to be able to report the organization of a Virden section including Virden and certain neighboring towns which would be under the immediate direction of a local secretary to be appointed at the meeting. In this section certain prices on staples to be agreed upon at this meeting would be charged by all association members and he hoped that all would agree to adopt the association remedy respecting credits.

The credit question was then fully discussed and the merits and difficulties of the plan to close books November 1st and allow no credit until April 1st were given due consideration.

J. R. Duke favored the plan. "Any man whose credit is worth anything," said he, "can very easily manage to pay cash during the winter months. If he can't pay cash during those five months he isn't a fit man to give credit to at any time. If his credit is worth anything he can go to the bank for ready money just as easily as we can. We do enough for him when we give him credit during the Summer."

S. S. Carscadden, Lenore, said he was quite satisfied to adopt the association programme and refuse credit during the five months.

Mr. McLennan said he knew of many instances in which customers with ready money in the bank were buying goods on credit. They had always been accustomed to do so and apparently they thought the merchants did not need money. The trouble was that they bought as cheaply as cash customers.

One of the Virden merchants was very loath to accept the association credit plan as he was afraid of offending a number of old customers whose credit is good but who pay him only once a year. It was soon made evident that in that respect all the dealers were in similar circumstances, and finally the credit plan was adopted unanimously.

On motion of Messrs. McLennan and Crowe, E. J. Scales, of Clingan, Scales & Wilcox, was elected to act as secretary of the Virden section and the meeting then resolved itself into a committee of the whole to prepare a uniform price list on certain staples. The following price list was adopted to go into effect immediately: Sugar (granulated) $6 per cwt. cash, 15 lbs. for $1. Sugar (yellow) 16 lbs. for $1. Tobacco—T. & B. 3s, 30c; T. & B. 4s, 25c; T. & B. 5s, 10c; Brier, 10c; Prince of Wales, 10c; Lily, 10c; Currency and Pay Roll 3 for 25c; all other 10-cent packages and plugs are to be sold 10 cents straight. Force, 20c per package, 2 for 35c. Grape Nuts, 20c per package, 2 for 35c. Malta Vita, 2 packages for 25c. Orange Meat, 15c and 25c per package. Cheese, 17½c per lb. Corn and peas, 2 cans for 25c. Blackwood & Dyson pickles sour 90c, sweet $1 per pail or jar. Glass fruit jars $1, $1.25 and $1.50 per dozen. Salt, per barrel, $2.50; 50-lb. jute sack, 65c; 50-lb. duck sack, 75c.

Owing to the produce supply in Virden being barely sufficient for local consumption it was decided to pay 20c per lb. for butter in bricks and rolls of first quality and 15 cents for No. 2 butter. Butter tubs are to be charged for in every town. The price to be paid for eggs is 20 cents per dozen.

These prices will be changed and the members of the Virden section notified by the local secretary, E. J. Scales, as market conditions require from time to time.

Lily White Gloss Starch?

Live dealers realize that substitution doesn't pay. People enjoy being the judges of what is best for them and it is wise policy to give them what they want.

The extra profit made from trial sales of unknown brands is very insignificant, compared with the continuous profit from repeated sales, sure to be the lot of any meritorious article.

Lily White Gloss Starch does what is claimed for it and the present heavy demand is the result.

Its success is a "continuous performance."

MARKETS AND MARKET NOTES

Ontario Markets.

GROCERIES.

Toronto, Oct. 12, 1905.

A HEALTHY tone still pervades business on the street, and buying is proceeding with more energy and spirit. The tea trade especially is marked with interest. Samples are getting better attention and are showing satisfactory results in liquoring properties. The report that the London market had recovered its slight weakness has had the effect of strengthening the Canadian market. Business in Mediterranean goods which was reported active at an early date is now followed by a natural anticipation of arrivals and consideration of their probable quality and condition.

Canned goods are continuing active and orders have been freely arriving. The belief strengthens that tomatoes will be a short pack this season, buying in consequence has probably been more animated and it is thought not at all improbable that an advance will follow at an early date.

The sugar market is still weak and uncertain, the recent decline apparently not having strengthened the situation very materially. Trade continues good in demand for immediate consumption. No disposition is at present manifested among dealers to stock up.

Syrups and molasses have been of little interest since our last issue. Molasses have shown a little activity, but not sufficient to cause much attention. Stocks are reported as low, with a tendency to strength in price. Foreign markets are reported as showing great strength with active demand. The new season's goods are expected to be on the market in a few weeks when great activity is looked for.

The local coffee trade has maintained a steady, progressive attitude with demand favoring milder grades and prices continuing firm.

The local tea trade has been increasing in activity with prices firming on previous basis, as samples coming to hand are showing much improved quality in the cup.

Foreign dried fruits have been occupying more attention and trade has been fairly brisk on new samples. Present prices are considered to be on a low basis and an increase is not at all improbable at an early date. Advices from primal markets, as will be seen by our detailed note, rather denote considerable strength; in some cases the prices have already advanced consequent upon the belief that the crops will scarcely be sufficient to meet the season's demand.

Rice and tapioca are continuing well in demand and prices rule very firm. There is little tapioca in stock and none is expected to arrive in the immediate future. In consequence of this a great demand is being made on the rice market with the result that the market is ruling firm with an upward tendency.

Spices continue active in a small way with no particular feature of interest to report.

Honey is coming in in fair volume, but demand has not yet assumed any great proportions.

Beans have occupied but little attention since our last issue, the inclination being to await arrivals of new crop, which is expected shortly.

Fresh fish maintains an active market, with oysters making great headway on account of the new arrivals showing excellent quality, prices being quoted at extremely good values.

New kippers and bloaters have arrived on the market and are added to our list.

Dried and cured fish are uninteresting with prices nominal.

The hide market continues in an active state of demand, absorbing all arrivals with prices maintained at previous high quotations. The condition is not considered a satisfactory one in as much as dealers are giving figures which will not allow sufficient profit to make the business a paying one. Any future advance is precluded by the fact that such an advance would probably lead to the introduction of imported stock, which is considered inadvisable.

The grain market is showing active business, but there is a good deal of difficulty in securing deliveries, owing apparently, to the railway facilities not being sufficient to equal the trade requirements. At the present moment there is no No. 1 hard offered on the market, but Nos. 1 and 2 Northern are freely offered with prices stiffening to advancing point. Oats are slow in arriving and are not showing the best of quality.

Flour is showing active demand both for export and home trade with prices falling to a more even basis.

Breakfast foods are occupying the usual amount of attention with orders coming in fairly well.

Canned Goods—Trade continues active in most lines, Orders have been coming in in good volume for future delivery on basis of new prices. The idea gains favor that tomatoes will be a short pack in consequence of which buying has been fairly free, and it is not at all unlikely that an advance will be reported at an early date. Previous quotations remain unchanged. We quote:

Sugar—The local sugar trade has assumed a more normal condition, although it cannot be described as of any degree of strength. Buying, in consequence, still continues of the character of immediate requirements and no disposition is manifested to lay in stock. The recent decline in prices appears to have had little effect towards strengthening the markets.

Advices from London denote a tendency to strengthening prices and there was an actual advance of half a cent on beet sugar at recent sales. The New York market is reported as being quiet as regards sales, and calls for shipment on outstanding contracts are declining. These reports have undoubtedly had the effect of maintaining a weakening tendency in domestic markets. A fair measure of trade, however, continues in evidence, as stocks are reported to be very low and a fair measure of demand continues, notwithstanding that the preserving season is fast drawing to a close. Syrups and Molasses—Local trade has been uninteresting in these lines. Syrups are quiet and only moving in small volume. Molasses are in demand to some extent, as confectionery lines, small stocks are generally reported, with prices firming, dealers are finding quotations somewhat in advance of buying on earlier markets. Tea—The local market for tea is showing increased activity and orders coming to hand are showing more discrimination in quality. The samples now showing are all that could be desired for the Canadian market and the prices asked are considered by experts to be on about as low a basis as is likely to rule for some time.

At recent sales on the London market prices have recovered the slightly downward tendency which had previously manifested itself and it is thought that the market will now rule firmer. There appears to be a tendency all round to give better prices for high values. The great run on low priced teas which has been the feature for some time of the London market appears to have exhausted itself and recent experience goes to show that when choice quality can be offered, as has been the case this season, an appreciative market is ready to hand. Both Indians and Ceylons are alike revealing strong, healthy conditions at the present time.

Foreign Dried Fruits—There has been active trade in currants and raisins. The new prices coming in on what was considered a low basis served as an incentive to buying, the result being that active business has been in evidence. Reports from Smyrna denote an upward tendency, with quotations showing advance of one shilling per cwt. Advices from primal points speak of unfavorable weather over the walnut districts, and it is feared that the effect will be disastrous to the crops. Quotations have already materially strengthened in consequence. We quote:

Grain—The market is showing fairly good activity as regards closing of contracts, but it is found extremely difficult to get grain forward to points of delivery with any degree of certainty. Railway companies appear already to be showing signs of being unable to cope with the amount of grain in transit. There is no No. 1 hard to be had on the market at the moment of going to press. Other grades have decidedly strengthened and are showing a firmer quotation of from one to two cents. Peas have weakened considerably and are now quoted three cents lower than last week. Rye also has fallen one cent. We quote:

Flour—The flour market still continues very active with regard to export demand and export quotations are remaining on about even basis with last week. Domestic supply is now flourishing with new quotations now on hand. It will be noted that our prices are revised to the extent of 20c. all through, thus showing the opening markets for new flour to be lower than those ruling at recent date. We quote:

Breakfast Food—Demand for these is active with prices showing no fluctuation at present. The tendency, however, for grain coming in from nearby points for manufacturing purposes is rather towards a weakening, but it is not expected to seriously affect the ruling prices of breakfast foods. We quote:

Hides, Tallow, Skins and Wool—The demand for hides continues good, easily absorbing all arrivals. Prices, however, are causing a good deal of dissatisfaction as it is almost impossible to do business on a profit basis. On present prices sufficient margin is not in evidence to cover expenses. U.S. prices with freight added are about same parity as Canadian quotations, making it impossible to advance. We quote:

Quebec Markets.

GROCERIES.

Montreal, Oct. 12, 1905.

THE jobbing grocery trade report business satisfactory. Orders are coming in in better shape. Collections are also quoted satisfactory. There are no special features to note in the condition of the grocery market this week.

Teas are in a satisfactory position and a fair amount of trading is done in all grades, with a slightly better interest in China greens and Ceylon greens.

The sugar market is unchanged, and no further decline is looked for as foreign markets have shown an improvement.

The molasses and syrup trade is gradually improving, and with the colder weather will no doubt be up to the usual Fall average.

Canned goods are on the quiet side. Jobbers are not as yet in a position to make deliveries of late pack of fruits and are waiting for canners to make deliveries.

Spice and coffee markets continue unchanged, with a slightly improved tone in the latter. Mediterranean dried fruits are uninteresting, with the exception of a slightly easier tone in Valencia raisins.

The fish business is fairly satisfactory, though dealers are looking forward to the colder weather with pleasurable anticipation.

Butter, cheese and eggs, and provisions all maintain a generally firm tone.

Maple products and honey are quiet and little trading is done.

In flour and feed the situation is unchanged from last week's report.

Canned Goods—The canned goods trade is reported on the quiet side. Packers have not as yet made very free deliveries of fruits and vegetables, and jobbers are consequently unable to fill future orders. It is reported, and the opinion seems to be generally prevalent, that tomatoes will not be delivered to full percentage. Some wonder is expressed at this in the trade, owing to the fact that weather conditions have been favorable to a large crop. If a 75 per cent. delivery is made to the jobbing trade, the conditions will not be entirely unacceptable. In connection with the canned goods situation a jobber called The Grocer's attention to the disparity in the price of peaches and pears of the American canning companies and the Canadian manufacturers. Peaches and pears are quoted from $1.25 to $1.50 per dozen less by United States packers than Canadian. It would seem, and the jobber appears to be correct in his opinion, that if the price of Canadian peaches and pears were less the consumption would increase very materially. It is no doubt a fact that "within reach of all" prices of United States packers has helped the consumption of these goods very materially, and lower prices on the part of Canadian packers would not only lead to the benefit of the consumer, but also result in larger business for the packers. As regards salmon, it has been reported that a second run of sockeye salmon is being put up as a cheaper line. Some canners however, prefer not to sell these goods except on sample. The trade would be well advised when purchasing salmon to assure themselves of receiving first run pack of fish, and no doubt these later and cheaper pack will enter into competition with earlier caught fish. We quote :

Sugar—The sugar market shows no change from last week's report. The situation is one of quiet trading. Jobbers report country orders as being steady, but not of large amounts. The feeling still prevails that prices might recede further but those more fully conversant with the situation are of the opinion that there will not be any further decline. We quote :

LAST MINUTE PROVISION MARKET.

Montreal, Thursday, Oct. 12, 12.30 p.m.

BUTTER—Steady. No change. Some tendency to easier prices. Eastern Townships fancy, 23½c.; choicest, 22½ to 23c., and good to fine, 22c. to 22½c.

CHEESE—Dull market. Quebecs and Townships little easier, former, 11½c. to 11⅝c.; latter, 11⅜c. to 11½c.; colored held at 11⅝c.

EGGS—Firm market. Stock scarce with active demand. Local consumption heavy and steady. Receipts falling off Export light and few being stored.

PROVISIONS — Good supplies of live hogs and prices weaker. No change from last quotations. Ham and bacon, demand light.

Coffee—The coffee situation is one of firmness, particularly in the milder grades. The better class of Rios and Santos are also stronger, and the general impression in the trade is that coffees will hold up. The local trade is reported to be in good condition, roasters and grinders being satisfied with the business that is turning in.

Messrs. Watt, Scott & Goodacre report, under date of 9th inst.:

Since our circular of 4th inst. New York market has been quiet and narrow. The several positions might be summarized as follows : Exchange options have lost five points; spot coffees are unchanged; and C. & F. offers show gains of ⅛ to ¼c. per lb.

The important feature of the week is the continued very hot weather in Brazil, to which Messrs. Holworthy, Ellis & Co., of Santos, make following reference : "We estimate the present Santos crop at 6,250,000 bags. The growing crop is likely to be damaged by the drought prevailing."

The most pronounced bears now accept 10,000,000 maximum Rio and Santos crops. Statistics from the New York Journal of Commerce, of Oct. 6th, show a decrease of 400,000 bags in receipts from opening of the coffee year, viz., July 1 to date, as compared with 1904. It is estimated that 44 per cent. of the Brazil crop has already been exported.

Statistics posted in the New York Coffee Exchange record a shrinkage as compared with even date last year of 1,641,889 bags.

Well described coffees are offering sparingly.

Tea—The tea market maintains firm position. Business is reported good. This is no doubt due to the strong advance shown in early grades of teas, particularly China greens, Ceylon blacks and Japans. The undertone of the market for all kinds of tea is strong, and buyers are finding that they will have to pay higher prices. The report of an advance of 20 per cent. shortage in China greens last week is confirmed, and this shortage has also affected the price of blacks, which are held firm. Business in Japans is reported fair. We quote :

Foriegn Dried Fruits—There is practically little or no change since our last report, with the exception that Valencia raisins have shown some little weakness. On the other hand, walnuts are somewhat stronger. Other lines remain about as last week. Business among the jobbing trade is reported fair for all lines of new raisins, and Mediterranean fruit. Rice and Tapioca—There is no change to report in the rice and tapioca market this week. There was only a fair amount of business doing, and no features of interest to note. We quote :

Spices—Spice market continues steady with an increasing demand for all grades. Peppers are reported a shade steadier in New York. Cloves active. Nutmegs are thought to have touched bottom and would seem to be good buying for grinders. Local trade quiet and about usual amount of business doing.

Maple Products— Business quiet and no prospects of any improvement. High grade maple products are firm. This is due to the fact that the trade and public are demanding pure goods, and the production of this quality is being encouraged and will no doubt develop as soon as the farmer realizes that it pays him to produce only the best, and refrain from mixing with cane sugar. Evaporated Apples—The evaporated apple situation is strong. Latest reports from evaporators say further advances are likely to take place owing to scarcity of apples. The trade locally is dull and what sales are being made are of a speculative character. Jobbers say 7½c is about what they are being sold at.

Fish—As the season advances with cooler weather the demand is increasing on all kinds of fish. Finnan haddies are now selling freely and merchants out of town generally are beginning to handle them. There has only been a fair demand for bulk oysters on account of the warm weather, dealers being afraid to order. The demand will increase as the weather hardens. Shell oysters have been scarce and prices are high, and there is no difficulty in disposing of quantities as they arrive, as shell oysters are more popular the early part of the season than bulk are. New salt herrings are now in the market. Cod fish of all kinds are scarce and prices much higher than last year at this time. The expected advance on skinless cod has materialized and they are now held firm at $6.

Mr. J. W. Flavelle.

THE RISE OF J. W. FLAVELLE.

MR. J. W. FLAVELLE, the chairman of the commission appointed by the Ontario Government to investigate the affairs of the Toronto University, has had a remarkable business career and one which has had some peculiar turns and twists in it.

He comes from a well-known Eastern Ontario family, being a native of Peterboro, and has two brothers at Lindsay, Ont., managing flour mills, dry goods stores and provision warehouses.

Like all the Flavelles, Mr. Joseph is a hard worker and knows how to get the most out of the men in his employ. He also has ideals. It was because of the difficulties he got into in championing one of his ideals that he took up his residence in Toronto some twenty years ago. In fact Toronto was a sort of city of refuge to him, for he entered it to escape the wrath of sundry offended citizens of Peterboro.

Mr. Flavelle is among other things a strong temperance man, and when the Scott Act campaign was started in Peterboro, where he was carrying on a small business as dealer in provisions, he buckled on his armor and sprang into the fray with all the vigor he possessed. He must have delivered some pretty hard blows, for after the fight was over the "antis" proposed to ruin Mr. Flavelle through his business. In other words they boycotted him, and they succeeded so well that he was glad to hand his business over to another man and take refuge in Toronto.

The "city of refuge" proved to be a commercial paradise to him. He was safe from the assaults of his enemies, and he waxed and grew fat financially, while in the Methodist Church he became a recognized pillar, strong and influential. In Toronto he first launched out into business for himself. Then he became a partner in the wholesale provision firm of Gunn, Flavelle & Co. He was the "Flavelle," of course. He remained in that firm until about fifteen years ago, when he retired to become managing director of the William Davies Co., the largest pork-packing firm in Canada, at a magnificent salary and with big prospects. The William Davies Co. was big before he took it in hand, but it is very much bigger to-day, and is still growing, while Mr. Flavelle instead of being a man with a few thousand dollars is a millionaire and yet is only a little past middle life. When he left the Gunn firm he left behind him a horse which he had brought in when he entered the firm, and it is still doing duty on one of the delivery wagons.

Mr. Flavelle is also possessed of an ideal in regard to newspapers. Accordingly when the Toronto News was getting into the mud he purchased it with a view to establishing a metropolitan newspaper designed on his models. He still owns the News.

Politics have so far had no attraction for him, although the sirens in the political and municipal camps have tried to lure him away from business to public life. Some day he may possibly be persuaded; in fact, seeing he has accepted a seat on the commission, there is every chance that he may some day aspire to a seat in Parliament or at least a place in the municipal council of his city. And if he aspires he is likely to realize.

IN MEMORIAM.

IT is with profound regret that the large circle of acquaintances and friends of Mr. St. Clair Balfour, the head of the well-known wholesale grocery firm of Balfour & Co., Hamilton, will hear of his sudden decease. Mr. Balfour had played an active and prominent part in the development of the grocery business of Hamilton.

He was active in the organization of the "Canada Grocers, Limited," the combine of which Balfour & Co. formed part, and for which he afterward journeyed to England as buyer. Mr. Balfour was an Orkney Island man, and was born on July 4, 1850. He came to Canada in 1870, and after coming to Hamilton entered the service of A. Murray & Co., dry goods merchants. Shortly after that he transferred to Brown, Gillespie & Co., wholesale grocers. This firm became known as Brown, Routh & Co., and on the death of Mr. Routh, Mr. Balfour was taken into partnership with Adam Brown. In 1890 Mr. Brown retired from the firm, and it then took its present name, Balfour & Co. At the time when Mr. Balfour was junior partner Hamilton was the great wholesale centre for Ontario, west of Toronto, and he had much to do with laying the foundations of the present extensive and successful business.

As a man he was not given to making himself prominent in public functions, but did much good in a quiet way. He was a good business man, and he was ever ready to extend a helping hand to those who were in need. Particularly thoughtful and generous was he to his employes, and no one will feel greater regret at his sudden death at a comparatively early age than those who were associated with Mr. Balfour in a business way. As a member of the Thistle Club, he enjoyed the respect of a very wide circle of friends among the most influential citizens.

Of late years Mr. Balfour has not taken quite as active a part in the management of the business of Balfour & Co., although his interests to the last were keen on everything concerning the welfare of the company.

Up to a quite recent date he appears to have been in his usual good health, and as late as Wednesday of last week was at the office. However, he was taken with an attack of hemorrhage, under which he gradually sank, passing away at his home in Duke street on Tuesday, the 10th inst.

A STARCH MERGER.

WITHIN the last ten days negotiations have been in progress for the consolidation of the Edwardsburg, Brantford and Imperial Starch Companies, and it is understood that subject to the confirmation of the shareholders of the latter a basis of agreement has been reached.

The scheme is not altogether a new one but the matter has been precipitated at the present juncture by the financial condition of the Imperial Starch Company, which is located at Prescott. This company has not been a money-maker and for some time has been carried by a chartered bank and a large trust company.

Recently an underwriting syndicate of well known Montreal business men was formed with a view to taking over the Prescott concern and consolidating the starch interests of Canada by incorporating it with the Edwardsburg and Brantford companies. Through a well known Montreal broker propositions were made to the firms interested with the result stated.

The directors of the Imperial Company met this week and have called the shareholders together for Saturday, the 21st inst., when a decision will be reached. In the meantime the works of the Imperial Company at Prescott have been closed.

BELLEVILLE CANNING CO., - Belleville, Ont.

N. S. Markets.

Halifax, Oct. 10, 1905.

THE grocery markets are still active with prices steady. In most all lines the sales are good, and the trade appears well satisfied with business.

Rice is a little stronger, having advanced half a cent per pound.

Sugar—The retailers have lowered sugar to 5 1-2c., a drop of half a cent. The general idea prevails, however, that with the present state of the sugar market, that commodity is costing the consumer too much.

Canned Goods—There is little doing in retail trade for canned goods. One dealer is endeavoring to boom trade in this line by offering four tins of beans, peas, or corn for a quarter. It is thought to be last year's pack which he obtained at a low price and is now trying to work off.

The market is well supplied with produce. Good Nova Scotia potatoes are quoted at $1.50 per barrel. The first shipment of P.E.I. produce arrived during the week. It consisted mainly of potatoes, which sold ex vessel, at 40c. per bushel.

Oysters—Notwithstanding the reported scarcity of oysters on P.E.I., heavy shipments are being made, the boats running to the mainland carying hundreds of barrels each trip. The largest single shipment was on Saturday last when the boat from Summerside for Point du Chene, landed 400 barrels at the latter place. These oysters were all for the Upper Canadian market, where the demand is, as usual, good. The best hand picked oysters are quoted here at $7.00 per barrel.

Apples—Good Nova Scotia apples are very scarce on the market just at the present time, Gravensteins in particular. There is lots of good fruit in the Annapolis Valley, but the growers are not marketing it The reason for this is not quite clear. The price is high and the demand good, and the dealers cannot understand what the fruit men are holding back their stock for. There is quite a lot of poor fruit offered for sale just now, such as the early varieties, which keep but a short time, drop Gravensteins and "cracks" of the same variety. This fruit is retailing at $1.50 to $1.75 per barrel. Extra choice No. 1 Gravensteins are fetching from $3.50 to $4.00 per barrel.

According to the latest reports from the Valley the apple crop promises to turn out much better than anticipated early in the season. The quality of the fruit on the average is good. Many buyers for foreign markets have been through the Valley recently making purchases and it is thought that this competition between the buyers has had a tendency to keep the prices very firm. From a reliable authority it is learned that the Valley fruit growers will not cater to the English market this year, the same as they did in the past. Their experience in this respect has not been very profitable in some instances, and for this season the bulk of the fruit will no doubt be marketed in Canada. It is thought that good sales of fruit can be made in Montreal, Toronto, and other Upper Canadian cities. The risk to the grower in selling his fruit in these places will not be so great as sending it across the water. Even if the growers have to accept a little lower price for their fruit, they will have the advantage of getting their returns more quickly, and this is an important factor to those requiring ready cash.

The fruit growers are beginning to realize that they have to comply with the Fruit Marks Act and most of the fruit now coming in is properly marked. The inspectors throughout the Provinces this year are showing a little more activity than heretofore, and already half a dozen growers have been fined for falsely marking their apples, classing No. 2's and No. 1's mixed as No. 1 fruit.

Butter, Eggs and Cheese.

The market has undergone little change as regards the price of butter, eggs, and cheese. The two former continue in good demand at last quotations. It is expected that the recipts of butter will improve from now on and the cheese factories which have been diverting a large amount of milk will be closing after the September make of cheese, there being a comparatively small amount of October made. When the making of cheese ceases, there should be a decline in the price of butter. Large cheese and twins are quoted here at 12c., and flats at 12 1-2c.

E. D. Marceau, Montreal.

DOMINION COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS' ASSOCIATION.

THE Grocer presents in this issue the portrait of Mr. E. D. Marceau, Montreal, who is a candidate for the first vice-presidency of the Dominion Commercial Travelers' Association, the election for which takes place in December. Mr. Marceau is a native of the Province of Quebec, having been born at St. Michel de Bellechasse. In 1886 he came to Montreal to enter the wholesale grocery house of L. Chaput, Fils & Cie., having acquired a thorough knowledge of the wholesale grocery business (devoting special attention to teas, coffees and spices) with the important house of Reid, Murdoch Co., Chicago. He remained with L. Chaput, Fils & Cie. thirteen years, four years of which he was an active partner. Six years ago he opened up a wholesale tea, coffee and spice house on St. Paul street, Montreal.

Mr. Marceau has been a member of the Dominion Travelers' Association for nineteen years and a director for two years, 1902-1904, and has always taken an active interest in the work and aims of this great commercial institution. His election to the first vice-presidency is one that will reflect greatly to the honor of that body and his numerous fellow members will no doubt see that he is elected. Outside of the fact of Mr. Marceau being in every respect an up-to-date experienced business man, he is full of energy and of good judgment, and his election will be a credit to the association in general, and to the grocery, tea and spice trades in particular. The Grocer wishes him success.

HINTS TO BUYERS.

The Eby, Blain Co., Limited, report the following new arrivals : New Malaga raisins, new peels, new shelled almonds, new sultana raisins, and are quoting special figures on all these lines.

A shipment of Malaga table raisins arrived this week for H. P. Eckardt & Co.

The Eby, Blain Co., Limited, are offering a snap in Spanish seeded Muscatel raisins in 1-lb. cartons, both for immediate and Nov. 15th shipments.

A snap in a fine 10c bottle of olives is being offered by the Eby, Blain Co., Limited.

The Eby, Blain Co., Limited, are offering a snap in "Nord Star" Norwegian smoked sardines. They pay a handsome profit, selling at 2 for a quarter.

Messrs. Sutcliffe & Bingham, Limited, "Khovah" Works, Manchester, England, have just placed on the Canadian market a line of "fruit and ginger wine" in decanters. This line is very good value and no doubt will sell well.

New season's figs have arrived for White & Co., Limited, Toronto.

The demand for Norwegian smoked sardines is increasing rapidly. Messrs. L. Chaput, Fils & Cie., Montreal, have secured the famous brand of Claus Andersens. The quality is very fine. These sardines are packed in pure olive oil, the fish are small and tender. All tins with key opener. Every up-to-date grocer should have it in stock. The price is considered low for the quality.

New table figs, California prunes, evaporated apricots and peaches, and new table raisins are in store this week, with Messrs. L. Chaput, Fils & Cie., wholesale grocers, Montreal.

A large consignment of "Victor" brand Japan tea arrived this week for H. P. Eckardt & Co.

Buyers of canned fruits should get prices from H. P. Eckardt & Co., who are selling at interesting prices.

"Rowley's" Spanish onions, which are exceptionally fine quality, may be had from H. P. Eckardt & Co.

BRITISH COLUMBIA NEWS.

By Our Own Correspondent.

Vancouver, B.C., Oct. 5, '05.

THE Transportation Commission, the Railway Commission, and the Tariff Commission, have each had their sessions in Vancouver, and gone again. The discussion before the Tariff Commission, perhaps, created the greatest interest in the discussion over the lumber duty. Other matters discussed were a memorial from the salmon canners, asking for a preferential tariff arrangement with Australia; an appeal from the wholesale drug trade for an interpretation of a clause in the customs' regulations respecting the "dumping" clauses; applications from various interests for reduction of duty on wire rope, steel plates, and other steel products.

Mr. H. Bell-Irving presented the salmon canners' memorial, and he pointed out that a benefit had resulted from the preferential treaty with New Zealand. Hon. Mr. Fielding remarked that it would not be the fault of the Commission if preferential trade with Australia were not secured.

Mr. Marstrand, of the Vancouver Breweries, Limited, asked that a duty of 32c. per gallon be placed on American beer, which was sold in such quantities as to injure the business of brewing in Canada. The witness informed the Commission that about 75,000 barrels of beer of home production are annually consumed in British Columbia, while 5,000 barrels of imported beer are drunk.

The visit of Mr. J. J. Hill, president of the Great Northern Railroad, to Vancouver a few days ago, was the occasion of some very remarkable announcements by the veteran railway builder. Chief in importance is that he intends to push the building of the V.V. & E. Ry. direct from the Kootenay to the coast, and that he will make Vancouver the terminus of all his railway lines in this Province. Building on the eastern end of the V.V. & E. is still being pushed, as it has been all Summer, into the Similkameen, and Mr. Hill stated that he intended having construction go on from the coast end also, the work to begin this Winter. The surveys from the coast have been made for some time.

Dawson-bound freight will have ceased to move in another ten days at farthest, according to latest advices from the north. Snow was flying at Dawson and ice in northern tributaries of the Yukon is forming, though the river is still open for navigation. Not in several years has the freight for the north been so well cleaned up. There will not be a ton of any sort of merchandise left over when the last boat leaves White Horse.

Recent papers from Dawson describe an egg famine then on in the Klondike capital, owing to the Winter supplies not having got in yet, though the stocks will not be large in any event, as the supplies from the markets of the east have not been up to the usual mark. A recent attempt of Dawson merchants to establish and maintain a schedule of prices in all leading lines of supplies has fallen through because all the dealers did not keep faith. The big houses made a strong effort to prevent price-cutting, but it was unsuccessful.

Some comment has been aroused again in connection with the Provincial Government's tax on commercial travelers, through the report from Ottawa that the Minister of Justice had given his opinion averse to interfering with the Provincial legislation.

Messrs. J. E. Hall and C. E. Hall, Manitoba grain men, have arrived in Vancouver to locate an elevator here for the handling of grain from the Northwest. They announce their intention to have their building up and ready for operation in time to handle part of this year's crop. It is expected that they will be far enough ahead by the middle of December to begin operations. Mr. J. E. Hall, in conversation, said that he expected they would find a considerable market for wheat in the Orient, though the ultimate intention was to build a flour mill here and grind wheat and ship the flour to Japan and China. In the coast and Yukon grain trade he felt that there was a growing and profitable business. The company intends receiving grain in bulk and shipping it in sacks. The new elevator is to have a capacity of 150,000 bushels.

The British steamer Volga is in port with a cargo of raw sugar from Java, for the B. C. Sugar Refinery. She carried 6,000 tons, which were loaded at Surabaya, Java. Leaving here, the Volga will load lumber at Portland for export.

Steamer Machaon, of the Blue Funnel Line, had to leave behind over 100,000 cases of canned salmon when she sailed for Liverpool on Oct. 1, because she was loaded down to her Plimsoll mark with 14,000 tons of cargo. The Jason, the next vessel of this line, will have even larger freight capacity, and is due in some time this week. The shipment of canned salmon almost exclusively by these steamers to the Old Country markets is making some heavy cargoes from B. C. ports at present.

The butter market is now somewhat more settled, after the recent flurry in price of local stock. The attempt of putting up the price, which was so completely frustrated by heavy importations from Northwest creameries, has not altogether ended, for there is a trade which demands the local fresh butter at any price, and the season is getting late for large quantities of butter to be made Reports from the ranches are that cows are so far milking really better than they did in hot weather, and so long as that keeps up, the butter supply will be from local sources. Creamery is now worth 25c., and dairy from 16 to 18c. in boxes, and 18 to 20c. in bricks. Eggs, strictly fresh, are scarce, and now bring 35 to 40c., while eastern stock is selling at 26 and 27c.

PURCHASE OF A CAN FACTORY.

The Acme Can Works, Montreal, have bought out the British American Can Co., Sarnia, Ont., and removed the plant to Montreal. This purchase completes one of the best equipped can factories in America and will enable the Acme Can Works to fill their orders with increased despatch. The business of the Acme Can Works during the past few years has expanded to such an extent that a new building will shortly be erected, 85x100 feet with three stories, and enable them to store at least 8,000,000 cans. The daily output of the plant will be 165,000 cans. In addition to the manufacture of cans the Acme Can Works are installing a plant for the manufacture of wire and solder, which lines they have been obliged to import heretofore. When completed it is considered the plant will be the most modern on the continent and fully able to attend to the requirements of the trade in the busiest of seasons.

CALIFORNIA LEMONS.

The lemon crop is making a very good showing. The season will be in movement in real earnest in a few weeks.

The acreages have been cultivated to their fullest extent, the high prices ruling this year having had a very stimulating effect on the lemon growers. It is expected that plenty of fruit will be ready for the market shortly.

N. B. Markets.

St. John, N.B., Oct 10, 1905.

BUSINESS continues good. The quantity of stuff moving is large, but there is not that snap of a year ago. Stocks of sugar and flour continue very light.

The canned goods situation continues a matter of great interest. This is such an important line that to have the agreement on prices broken just now, when deliveries are being made, makes it difficult for the trade to know just where they are. It means considerable loss to some and some loss to all. And there is sure to be unpleasantness and dissatisfaction.

The first Valencia raisins for this season were received last week and quality was particularly good.

New California evaporated peaches, apricots and prunes are daily expected.

The holding back of the prices on California raisins till so late was a great disadvantage to the trade particularly, because it made it so very late to increase foreign orders.

In general lines there is little change.

Twin cheese, which are altogether used here, are quoted well above western large. The quantity offering is small.

Hops are held firm.

Rice is rather higher. The quantity is rather below standard.

Oil—Dealers in burning oil are very busy. Fall orders are now being shipped out. The buyers feel good as already their stock shows a profit as the late advance is firmly held. In lubricating oils the sale is rather smaller than usual at this season. Paint oils show fair business, linseeds keeping low and turpentine high. Cod oil is very scarce and full prices are obtained by the fishermen for all they bring in. Prices would be even better if they would be more careful in regard to quality.

Salt—There are fair stocks of Liverpool coarse salt held and a large cargo shortly due. It will soon be time for the winter port steamers so there will be no shortage. Sales have been very large. Prices are held firm. In fine the season of best demand is over.

Canned Goods—On corn, peas, and tomatoes, there are no prices. It is a question of what you can get. People are not, however, particularly anxious to lose money, so while in special localities there is extreme competition, in general, matters are rather quiet, except that dealers who have sales made are busy trying to explain matters to their customers, who they try to hold without losing their prospective profit. It is hard, however, as it is natural the retailers should want to take full advantage of the situation. In other lines values are unchanged.

Green Fruit—Apples hold at full prices. Receipts are not large. There will be quite a quantity of western apples used and they are high. The Nova Scotia crop is rather a failure this year. Except in soft fruit, few apples are grown in New Brunswick. Oranges and lemons are still high and sell slowly. Grapes are more freely offered and prices tend lower. The Ontario peaches received are good and bring good prices. It is late for any large business in bananas. Some few Malaga grapes offered.

Dried Fruit—The new Valencias which are offered are of good quality and lower in price than is usual for first arrivals. The market is quite easy. Quite a few Malaga loose muscatels have been bought at reasonable prices. California raisins are not being as largely bought owing to price. New prunes, apricots and peaches are due. Those who bought are fortunate, as all prices have advanced. Figs, peels, and dates will show little change. Evaporated apples are high and firm. Some new fruit has been received. There is quite a stock of onions just at present. Market is a little easier.

Sugar—Prices are unchanged. Stocks are still very light. Buyers have not confidence in the market. There is fair business.

Molasses—In Porto Rico a large stock is held chiefly by one importer. Reasonable prices are quoted. In Barbadoes, stock is not large.

Fish—This is the season of sale, particularly for pickled herring. Prices are held firm at quite full figures. Stock offered is good, but there is little or no fancy stock. In dry fish prices are still high. Codfish is rather a luxury. The shipments of finnan haddies west is now becoming large with the cooler weather here. Full prices are being obtained. In smoked herring prices continue low.

Flour, Feed and Meal—In flour sales have been quite large. The trade have found it hard to fill orders. They have been backward buying and the mills very slow in forwarding stock. The market is still unsettled. Oatmeal has not followed oats, but is held firm by the millers. Again the trade have not confidence in the market. Cornmeal is unchanged. Beans are lower, particularly yellow eyes.

Manitoba Markets

(Market quotations corrected by telegraph up to 12 a.m. Thursday, Oct. 12th, 1905.)

Groceries.

INCREASED activity marks the wholesale grocery market. Harvesting operations in September hindered trade in some lines, although they stimulated the demand for canned goods and provisions. Several million bushels of wheat have already been marketed and the effect is already seen in a slight, but welcome, relief to the stringency of the money market. Collections are already beginning to improve.

A decline in sugar to a basis of $5.25 in barrels Winnipeg, indicates a downward trend to the market and buying is still restricted to the supplying of immediate requirements.

New California raisins will be on the market about Nov. 1st and the indications all point to prices much higher than those obtaining last year. If these prices are maintained it is evident that the cheaper Valencias will have the call.

New rolled oats are now selling at 5c. less than the prices indicated in last issue.

Beans are selling much cheaper as the new season stock will be on the market in a very short time.

Tapioca is easier in primary markets, but there has been no change in local quotations. However, it is pretty certain that prices have reached their highest and that the next change will be a decline.

Sugar—The decline last week to $5.25 for Montreal granulated in barrels marks the downward trend of the sugar market. The retail trade are buying in small quantities, apparently having no faith in the stability of the market. We quote:

The Hall-mark of Quality

Lion Brand Pickles have long been known as the best keeping, appetizing, tasty bulk pickle on the market.

It has always paid merchants to handle these goods, and those who have had them once always insist on them again.

There are a good many reasons why our pickles should be the best: right soil, expert cultivation of the vegetables, most completely equipped plant in the country, cleanliness carried to the extreme, men who thoroughly know their business, whole pure spices, and a malt pickling vinegar that has no equal anywhere. Now, remember that our goods cost no more than others.

Foreign Dried Fruits—About Nov. 1 the new season California raisins will be on the market and all indications point to very high opening prices. In fact if these prices are maintained it seems likely that the demand will be diverted to the new Valencias, the opening prices of which are easy. The new California prices will be noted below. The first new Valencias will be on the market by the time this appears in print. The opening price on this first shipment of Trenor's F.O.S. is $1.85 per box, but the next shipments will be considerably cheaper. New season nectarines are now on the market and quotations will be found below. We quote:

TOLEDO COMPUTING SCALES

Automatic but Springless.

The "Toledo" is a money saver because it positively stops the giving of overweight.

A time saver because it is Automatic.

A labor saver because there are no weights to lift, no poises to slide, or prices to set.

A trade bringer because it indicates to the customer in plain figures the correct weight of the article he is buying.

It is honest both to the merchant and customer.

The Toledo system costs you nothing because it is paid for with the money you are now losing.

This book is a new departure in the way of a book on "cost accounting." In it you will find treated the principles of the science instead of a description of what some one else has done. Other people's systems do not interest you unless you can apply them to your own uses, hence only those which can be applied to your own needs are touched upon.

FRESH AND CURED FISH

SALMON PROTECTION.

IN the counties bordering on the Straits of Northumberland, Nova Scotia, are annually taken about one hundred thousand pounds of these fish. Estimating their value at fifteen cents per pound, the annual value of the fisheries to the fishermen in these counties is $15,000.

A female salmon weighing fifteen pounds is estimated to have fifteen thousand spawn. If one of every hundred reach maturity, there would be 150 fish, say, of ten pounds each, equal to 1,500 pounds, worth at fifteen cents per pound $225.

Facts like these show the importance of preserving the salmon when in the river for spawning purposes during October and November.

Any person killing a female salmon at this time is destroying a fish worth $100 to the country, and particularly to the fishermen of these counties. A one hundred dollar meal is an extravagance which should not be tolerated, and salmon poachers should meet with no sympathy. Information should be given to the proper officers that proper proceedings may be instituted to protect so valuable an industry.

MOTOR FISHING BOAT.

Up to the present time the rule has been, "no breeze, no fish," but the advent of the motor boat bids fair to do away with this, and at the same time fill a long existing necessity. Among the Bay of Fundy fishermen a good deal of amusement was caused lately by one of their number setting out one morning with his boat propelled by a gasoline engine.

One day, however, it happened that there was no wind; then the skipper of the newfangled machine had the laugh on them, for he was able to continue fishing whilst they were resting.

CUTTING SALMON PRICES.

Cable advices from London announce that in order to get rid of their pack of about 75,000 cases of the Fall run of sockeyes the Puget Sound salmon canners have upset the British market. The Americans are quoting one-pound talls of the second run of sockeyes at 20s., whereas the regular price on the whole season's run has been 25s. The result of the American quotations has been to cause no end of confusion among the British buyers, who ordered at the regular figure. These brokers are now anxiously wiring to British Columbia to learn the cause of the sudden drop in price.

N. B. FISHING GOOD.

The catch of hake at Grand Manan the first part of last week was fair, but the latter part of the week the fishing was extra good. One weir at Grand Harbor caught four thousand cod fish in one tide, and as many large pollock in another tide. All the weirs are doing well in the herring fishery, particularly those at Seal Cove, Grand Harbor and Long Island, where the catch has been as high as five hundred hogshead of small herring at one time. Some net herring were taken the latter part of the week at Three Islands. Grand Harbor reported very good fishing.

JAPAN FISHERIES.

Japan is the leading fishing nation in the world, although the value of her sea products is surpassed by that of two other countries. The United States (outside of Alaska) and Great Britain each produce about £9,000,000 worth annually, and Japan produces about £6,000,000 worth. Japan leads in the proportion of the total population engaged in the fishing industry, in the actual number of people living by the industry, in the relative importance of fish products in the country's domestic economy, and in the support given by the Government to the industry.

A SARDINE FACTORY.

St. John, N.B., now has a sardine factory. For several years past the fishermen here have been catching sardine herring in the Fall, in the harbor, and selling them to Eastport and Quebec packers. This year four brothers named Nice, who have had experience in Eastport organized themselves into the Atlantic Packing Co., Limited, and put up a small factory on the western side of the harbor near the breakwater. They have installed a 12 horse-power engine, and are putting up the "Regina" brand of sardines, getting the fish close beside the door of their factory. The little fish are caught in seines, and are treated and packed after the most approved methods, for the Canadian market. Thus an industry is added, and the fishermen have a home market for their catch.

PROGRESSIVE BRACEBRIDGE.

Kirk Bros., Bracebridge, Ont., in keeping with the progressive character of their town, have given a new instance of the energetic spirit which animates them.

They have just completed very extensive alterations to their store and the resulting structure is at once capacious, modern and handsome. The front of the store presents a striking appearance, being completely glazed; the windows are hung on weights to enable them more easily to be raised for the display of goods; the floor is of hardwood and the ceiling metallic. The two arc lamps and numerous incandescent lights give brilliant illumination.

A two-story annex has been erected in the rear of the store to facilitate the convenient handling of the large stock of groceries, flour, feed and hay.

QUAKER SUGAR AND CREAM CORN

This is a line we are now packing which we intend to make our main specialty. Packed from the finest Maine Seed, with the ears all selected, with the cans well filled with corn and not watery juice. We believe there is a future for an article of this class of goods if properly placed on the market and the attention of the consumers called to its superior merits. There is no line of goods packed in cans that varies so much as corn in quality, consequently there should be an opening on the market for a really high-class article, something in which the goods were not only at the tip-top but that every can could be depended on to be of a high and uniform quality. This is what we claim for Sugar and Cream and the reputation of the Quaker is behind these assertions. While the contents inside of a can are of more importance than the outside, it may not come amiss to say that these goods are sent out in very handsome embossed wrappers, far superior to anything we have yet seen from our competitors.

GREEN FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

APPLE EXPORT SATISFACTORY.

MR. McNEILL, chief of the fruit division, Ottawa, has received word that the shipments of apples to England during the past two weeks have been the heaviest of the season. The Fruit Marks Act and the educative work of the fruit division are beginning to have their effect on the shipments. The inspectors at the shipping port state that the XXX, or No. 1 grade, were never more uniform or of better quality than this year, and are a distinct improvement over previous years. Violations of the Act are few and far between, and fraudulent packing is more often the result of ignorance than criminal intent.

The improvements in quality and uniformity of packing are also having their effect on the demand in the Old Country market. Buyers over there are taking very kindly to Canadian apples, frequently in preference to the home-grown fruit, because they feel able to assure their customers that they will get what they ask for. On the other hand the English apples, while of good quality, are seldom offered twice of the same grade. This creates difficulties of trade that all buyers endeavor sedulously to avoid.

Another step in improvement is demanded, however. It is that the very choicest apples be packed in boxes in order to cater to a trade where price is not so great consideration as the securing of the very highest quality.

CALIFORNIA RAISIN MERGER.

THE California raisin growers have devised a plan for safeguarding their interests, and in order to adequately cope with the business.

The plan includes four corporations and intercontracts. There will be a contract between the California Raisin Growers' Co., party of the first part, and the packing house company of the growers, party of the second part; the following packing firms: Pacific Coast, Griffin-Skelley, the Phoenix, Castle Bros., Fresno Home, J. K. Armsby Co., Guggenheim Co., Madison & Bonner and the A. L. Hobbs Packing Co., party of the third part, and the Mercantile Co., party of the fourth part. The last named company is merely to distribute profits and expenses among the packers proportionately.

The joint growers and packers' packing company will be known as the Central California Packing Co., with a capital stock to be agreed upon, and to be controlled by eleven directors, five from the packers and five from the growers, with one neutral director. The stock will be equally divided with provision for neutral shares.

The present packing houses are to be purchased by the company at their appraised valuation by insurance adjusters upon a fire basis. The growers will purchase their interest with the half cent provided in the contract.

The new joint packing company is to do all the packing, seeding and selling for three years. The packing is to be done at actual cost. In previous years certain definite sums were fixed as actual cost, but as a matter of fact large profits were made, as the actual cost was under the arbitrary figures. The growers will also have their share of the returns from the by-products. The matter of seeds alone runs up into the thousands of dollars.

The profit for the packing company is fixed definitely at $20 on seeded and layer raisins, and $10 a ton on loose goods. This may be deceptive at first thought, as in reality it amounts to the growers to but half these figures, as the growers being equal partners in the business will share half the profits.

FRUIT FROM THE WEST.

Following up the successful shipping of fruit last year from the Niagara district to Winnipeg, more extensive shipments are being made this year. The Ontario Fruit Growers' Association, the Ontario Department of Agriculture and the Dominion fruit division are co-operating. Shipments have been made so far from St. Catharines, the fruit being supplied by the St. Catharines Cold Storage Co.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

TORONTO.

Green Fruits.

THERE is still great activity in the fruit markets, although there has been a decline in arrivals of domestic fruit sufficient, however, has come in to meet the demand with a moderate drawing on accumulations from previous arrivals.

Trade is expected to show considerable settling down during the coming week owing to the holding off of arrivals of fresh fruit, no imported fruit having yet made its appearance. Domestic plums have now left the market, but we have to report the arrival of Idaho plums which are quoted at $1.25 per carrier.

We quote:

Oranges, late Valencias, per box	5 00	6 00

Vegetables.

The vegetable market has shown distinct decline since our last issue and it is reported that the appearance of frost has affected the arrivals of several lines.

Green corn is practically off the market.

Sweet potatoes have dropped 25c.

Onions have dropped 5c., whilst we have to report the addition to our list of artichokes at $1, and salsify at 30c. per dozen bundles.

QUEBEC MARKETS.

Green Fruit.

Montreal, Oct. 12, 1905.

Market generally is on the quiet side, which is attributed principally to the warm weather prevailing. This unseasonable warm weather is restricting the sale for the varieties of fruits offering.

Canadian grapes have been coming in quite freely. Owing to the lighter shipments at the end of last week, prices show a slight advance; larger shipments, however, early part of this week have brought prices down again. Blue grapes sold Monday at 15c. to 16c.; Niagaras, 18c. to 20c., and Rogers, 20c. to 22c. A car of California Tokays sold on Friday of last week at an average of $2.25 per crate. This was a very fancy car of fruit, and prices are considered very fair and much better than same grapes realized on the American market, notwithstanding the very heavy duty of 50c. paid here.

Canadian pears are in very light receipt, and any good eating varieties are now bringing high prices.

Peaches and plums are about finished.

Spanish onions in large cases are selling at $2.25 to $2.50, and crates 80c. to 90c.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Vancouver, Oct. 2, 1905.

CONCORD grapes are in the market here now, selling wholesale at 80c. per 8-lb. basket. There are some local grapes, while the Okanagan produces a limited quantity, which, however, do not reach coast markets. California grapes are always freely imported to this market. Just now they sell to the trade at $1.50 to $2 per box of 20 lbs.

Okanagan apples have been an enormous crop, and the quality is up to the reputation of the section of the country, but very little of the fruit is likely to sell on the coast this season, as such large quantities have be contracted for in the Northwest. What stock from the Okanagan is now offering brings $1.75 to $2 per box. Local apples vary, as usual, very greatly, the bulk selling at $1 per box, and much of it for less. There is a large crop.

Late pears, of which large quantities of very good quality are produced in orchards of the coast district, have hardly begun to come into the market.

BISCUITS AND CONFECTIONERY

ENTHUSIASM.

JUST as the miner assays his claim before he sinks his shaft, so should you probe each business possibility before you begin to work it.

Quit scraping over the surface of your business chances—quit remaining content with the pay dirt on the outer edges of your commercial prospects.

There is a nugget in every opportunity—if you only delve deep enough to get it. And don't merely dig without aim or method.

Many a grocer to-day is resting content with the mere ordinary routine of serving customers with what they ask for. Such men will never make much mark in the world. The man to succeed is the man alive to his opportunities.

How is the confectionery trade? It should be going ahead like hot cakes at this season. The grocer should be looking forward to the coming jovial season, and filling his customers with his own enthusiasm.

A few simple lines ought to be well in evidence to show to the customers what to expect against the coming season. Many are the old things in "new names" which are bound to be an ever increasing attraction. Arrange a prominent show place for the display of your goods—speak to the customers and let them know that you have booked well ahead—talk to him and get him fired with the prospects of numerous fresh arrivals. Enthusiasm is a contagious disease, and if a customer catches on he usually has it badly, then the storekeeper scores "one," and a good "one" too.

STOCK UP CAREFULLY.

IN the handling of confectionery it is of the greatest importance to be absolutely sure of the quality of the various lines you offer your customers.

The tendency of the grocer is just to handle these goods without much regard to either distinctive feature or quality. No grocer can possibly expect to make his confectionery department the real success it should be unless he discriminates as to the goods he sells.

The way to etablish reputation, and a reputation which will last and continue to attract trade, is to handle only superior goods. Better far, be content with a very moderate profit and have the fullest confidence of your customers, than to serve them with what appears at the time to be an attractive article and afterwards for your customers to be seriously disappointed therein. To carry out this does not of necessity mean that you are purchasing the most expensive goods on the market. The grocer who will give the necessary attention to the markets of the many confections which are offered for sale, will discover that many of these lines are placed on the market by irreproachable wholesale firms who make a strong feature of giving the best possible quality, and rely almost exclusively for their profit on the cuteness of buying their raw material.

A well displayed show counter of fancy confectionery, which has been purchased by the grocer with the most absolute care and scrutiny, cannot fail to attract to his store a continual and increasing stream of trade. The younger members of the community, who are the great buyers of sweetmeats and confections, are, without question, keen to know a good thing when they see it and if they are once pleased will place that implicit confidence, peculiar to children, in the person who has treated them well.

J. E. Adams, baker and confectioner, Winnipeg, Man., has sold his business to M. H. King.

BISCUITS COME BISCUITS GO

From country and from home,
Under the burning tropic sun,
Or midst the Arctic sleet,
You are happy if you only have A dish of ORANGE MEAT.

"There's no place like home!" and what is associated with home. No matter where he is, Orange Meat reminds "Tommy" of home, because it is a home product, and because, like his people, it has been good to him. Grocers wending their way without Orange Meat are without all that appertains to business, home, the stimulus to activity, the appreciation for a product whose course of success could be written across the words HONESTY, MEASURE, PRICE. Orange Meat has reanimated more stagnant grocery businesses than almost any other single commodity, because it is not ordered in a stray way, but a regular way — trade which never relaxes. Give Orange Meat a fair trial and it will yield more than fair returns. Do it now.

Frontenac Cereal Co.

KINGSTON, - ONT.

FLOUR AND CEREAL FOODS

SEE TO YOUR FLOUR SALES.

THE progressive storekeeper must be ever on the alert to keep his "turnover" up; he cannot afford to sit still; "movement" is the order of the day. Remember that you mostly get what you go after, if you go after it in the right way. Go after it to get it. This rule applies to the dealer seeking trade for flour, and in these days you must seek the trade if you want it. The trade rarely seeks the flour, unless the latter is being sacrificed.

Be careful in the first place that the flour you handle possesses real merit, not only "just as good" flour as any other of the same grade, but a little better; then go after the trade and keep going after it. There may be delays and disappointments to the beginner just taking it on, but if he stays industrially with it he will win out. Remember, flour trade pays well, properly handled.

TAKE CARE OF YOUR STOCK.

THE storage of flour is of great importance to the dealer, and requires that care should be taken to see that the room used for storage purposes is well ventilated.

Flour needs plenty of pure fresh air, although this fact is often overlooked by flour dealers.

The building should be well up from the ground, and there should be roomy air passages through the foundation walls. This will insure a dry floor on which to stack the flour; it cannot be too dry or sweet either.

Millers, as well as merchants, are lax in the matter of flour storage, although the latter are generally the more careless. Many store warerooms are unfit places for flour, being in such condition that the flour soon becomes contaminated to such an extent as to make it unfit for use, or at least enough to cause complaint, the extent of the damage depending upon the length of time the flour remains in store. Some merchants do not know this, and are excusable on the score of ignorance, but others are simply careless.

The miller delivers a fresh lot of flour to one of these careless dealers, who has on hand in his hot, close-smelling warehouse a few barrels or bags of the last lot. The fresh flour is piled on top, or in front of the old, so that the last in must be sold first. It is not strange that the old flour deteriorates, nor that the dealer receives many complaints.

The surest way to remedy the evil is to instruct merchants how to store their flour. Impress them with the fact that flour will absorb odors readily, and that a damp, musty warehouse is sure to result in contamination; and then induce them to take steps to provide suitable storage. A lost customer often means a lost reputation.

Unfortunately millers are not always as careful as they might be about storing their product themselves. The first aim should be to have a clean, sweet storehouse, and fresh flour should never be stored in such a manner that the older product cannot be got at and worked off first.

Age does not cause flour to deteriorate so long as it is kept sweet and free from worms.

A case in point might be instanced of flour being kept in a very damp room during an extremely wet and hot period. The bread made from that flour became unfit for use within ten hours after baking. It simply decomposed.

GRAIN MOVEMENTS.

With 5,000,000 bushels of wheat marketed and moving east to Fort William for lake and rail delivery, and with the prospect that 20,000,000 bush. will reach the Canadian elevators at the head of Lake Superior before the close of navigation, a problem in transportation is this year submitted more difficult of solution than any that has hitherto engaged the attention of the vesselmen and railwaymen of this country.

A HARDY CEREAL.

There is no cereal less subject to disease than maize. Blight, mildew and rust pass over it and leave it practically unharmed. Rain can scarcely beat it down, and violent storms of wind may rage, and rage in vain. In climates and seasons which are favorable to its growth and maturity the only enemies which the maize farmer has to dread are insects in the early stages, and birds in the later stages of its cultivation.

BRITISH CROP ACREAGE.

The following interesting report has been issued by the Board of Agriculture, giving preliminary statements of the acreage of the principal crops in Great Britain. The acreage for last year is also given for comparison:

	1905.	1904.
All crops and grass..	32,286,832	32,317,610
Wheat	1,796,985	1,375,284
Barley.....	1,713,664	1,840,684
Oats	3,051,376	3,252,962
Potatoes	608,471	570,209
Turnips and swedes	1,589,273	1,604,104
Hops.....	48,968	47,799
Orchards	244,323	243,008

The number of horses is 1,572,433, against 1,560,236; the cattle show a total of 6,987,020, an increase of 128,668; the sheep number 25,257,196, an increase of 50,018, and the pigs total 2,424,919, a decrease of 436,725.

TOBACCOS, CIGARS AND ACCESSORIES

A FRIENDLY CHAT.

"COURTESY in business," how simple it reads, and yet how little attention is really given by the dealer to this very valuable asset of his business.

How much it means to the custom visiting his store—a little thoughtful consideration—a gentle persuasive suggestion and the customer finds himself unconsciously interested in some article to which he had previously given no thought.

How much it means too, to the storekeeper himself—a better understanding with his customer—more sales effected, and with greater ease, and the great satisfaction of seeing profits piling up.

The following little clever bit of advertising to attract the attention of shoppers was recently put up in a Detroit tobacco store:

"Last week three women spent three "hours looking at novelties and finally "bought a 25c. ash tray. Did we get "angry? Not a bit of it. The ladies "give us 20 per cent. of our business "and they can have all the time they "want."

A really clever bit of level headed business talk, it worked well. Civility costs nothing, adds much to the attractiveness of the store and is an excellent investment. Try a good stock of it!

CANADIAN TOBACCO CROP.

Tobacco is certainly king in the southern and southwestern parts of Kent County, and now that this year's crop is well in, every day brings its quota of reports of the extraordinary yield in some localities.

The weed this year is an unusually heavy crop of excellent quality and in spite of the conflict waged with various slugs, whose absence last year was most noticeable, nearly every farmer growing a crop of tobacco is reporting receipts of from $100 to $200, and even more per acre.

One of the most successful growers has been Gilbert L. Pardo, of Cedar Springs, who sold his last year's crop for $1,500 and this off eight acres.

AMERICAN TOBACCO CROP.

The progress of the American tobacco crops is making good headway. In most districts it is reported that the crops have been nearly all housed, and in many instances cured.

During the season the weather has proved somewhat treacherous from time to time, and at one period fears were entertained that the crop would have been seriously affected. Generally speaking however, it has proved satisfactory and in some districts has reached record figures.

There are reports that denote in some places the heavy electrical storms have left their mark behind them, but from reports from various centres it would appear that yields are generally very satisfactory both in quality and quantity.

IRISH TOBACCO AT N. Y.

There will be a case of genuine Irish tobacco on exhibition at the New York tobacco exposition. It was secured from Col. Everard, who successfully conducted a tobacco experimental farm last year in County Meath, Ireland.

INLAND REVENUE RETURNS.

The following inland revenue returns for the month of September have come to hand:

Ottawa — Spirits, $25,520.06; malt, $670.50; tobacco at 25c., $2,913.00; Canada Twist, $8; cigars at $6.00, $150.00; methylated spirits, $45.75; licenses, $54; fines, seizures, etc., $10; showing a total of $29,371.31.

Kingston, Ont.—Cigars ex factory, $507; cigars ex warehouse, $1,197.30; manufactured tobacco ex warehouse, $1,088.50; raw leaf for use, $585.66; showing a total of $3,378.46.

Prescott, Ont.—Foreign cigars ex factory, $48; foreign cigars ex warehouse, $90; raw leaf, $51.90; malt, $1,525.47; spirits, $5,167.31 showing a total of $6,882.68.

Charlottetown, P.E.I.—Foreign leaf tobacco ex factory. $2,754.25; foreign leaf tobacco ex warehouse, $354.00; native leaf tobacco ex factory, $54.85; raw leaf tobacco ex warehouse, $1,911; showing a total of $5,074.10.

Winnipeg, Man.—Cigars ex factory, $2,138.25; foreign leaf cigars ex warehouse, $2,718.60: manufactured tobacco ex warehouse, $32,661.25; raw leaf tobacco, for use, $1,615.20; malt, $5,421; spirits ex warehouse, $54,960.01; showing a total of $109,514.31.

HOME GROWN TOBACCO.

The Government Blue Books for the last fiscal year show that the smokers of Canada consumed 13,160,000 pounds of home manufactured tobacco. This is 1,200,000 pounds above the average of the four previous years.

The people seem to have smoked also 180,000,000 Canadian cigars, or nearly one hundred for each adult male in the country. Only about 9,000,000 cigars were imported, or about five per cent. of the whole number sold.

Did you ever notice the difference between the man who does things and the man who says he is going to do things? One talks, the other acts. One has a bright, up-to-date store, filled with seasonable bargains; the other says he is going to have these things, and some day he has them, in a slip-shod sort of a way. But when he gets them he is too late, the man who acts has cleaned up all the trade.

Ours is an easy task—to tell you that after nearly 50 years in the manufacture of Laundry and Culinary Starches, no competitor has been able to produce as perfect goods as

Edwardsburg "Silver Gloss" Starch and Benson's "Prepared" Corn

That is why these lines are popular with the housekeeper, and profitable to the grocer—No wise up-to-date merchant is without them.

GOLDEN RUSSET BRAND

WILSON WAYS

2. INIMITABLE, INDEED

Attempts are often made to imitate

GOLDEN RUSSET VINEGAR

but always without success. The unsuccessful imitation is easy to make, as well as cheap; hence, its popularity with certain manufacturers. Coloring is used in the attempt to produce the clear, bright golden color of GOLDEN RUSSET VINEGAR.

Sulphuric acids, etc., are used in the endeavor to correct imperfect manufacture. This vile stuff is then put on the market to compete with GOLDEN RUSSET VINEGAR. Isn't it silly? And yet some grocers order the vile stuff because it has a brown color and is called "vinegar."

Made in Canada

These words are the key to the success that every true Canadian heartily desires for this fair Canada of ours!

Why should we buy goods of any description that are made in a foreign country? The making of foreign goods does not give employment to our artisans. It does not retain money in this country.

Why use Foreign Salt? We have CANADIAN SALT that is superior to any foreign salt that is made.

Why not help build up Canada by using

Canadian Salt

and thereby employ Canadian labor, Canadian works, and Canadian capital?

PUBLIC ESTIMATION

Ceylon Teas

Ceylon Teas have two tracks into Public Estimation: Grocers' Confidence, Makers' Honesty. One is the counterpart of the other. Without the grocer firmly believing in his goods, and thereby putting his own personality behind them, makers' honesty could accomplish little. The people look to the grocer, the grocer to the maker. Ceylon Teas are sold with confidence because grocers know they are held high in esteem by users and that that esteem being earned worthily will be permanent. Keep your shelves well stocked with Ceylon Teas.

The Only Spice of Life for Horses, Cattle and Poultry

IS Myers'

It is not a Stock Food, but a condiment to be used with food, and contains no corn, middlings, etc. Why pay ten cents per pound for what costs only one cent? If you desire bulk for your money take 100 pounds of middlings, or such like, and mix with 100 pounds Myers' Spice, you will then get a much superior article than most advertised Stock Foods, and it will cost you only $5.50 per 100 pounds. A saving of $4.50 on 100 pounds is an item not to be lost sight of. Is not this true economy?

You have your Reputation to think of

When you sell a customer an order of canned goods she holds you responsible for their quality.

If they are of passibly good quality she makes no complaint and you make no advance in her favor.

If they are of poor quality, who does she blame? The packer? No. She blames you, the grocer, who, she holds, should protect her against inferior goods.

If they are of the highest quality the housewife is quick to recognize it. You get the credit. She not only comes back for more but she tells her neighbors.

CANADIAN DEPARTMENT STORE DEVELOPMENT

WINNIPEG'S LATEST STORE.

THE recent increase in the capital stock of the T. Eaton Co. from $500,000 to $1,000,000 is due largely to the policy of expansion now being inaugurated by that concern. The building of a large new store in Winnipeg was a radical step for Eaton to take, judging from the emphatic manner in which he previously declined any and all propositions to "branch out." His idea has always been one of concentration, and it would not be surprising if the responsibility for this western move rests upon other shoulders than his.

A similar experiment was tried by the old firm of Barnes, Hengere & Co. of Buffalo during the western boom in the States. They decided to open a large branch department store in Minneapolis, and managed to lose almost every dollar they invested, notwithstanding an extensive wholesale connection which enabled them to buy to exceptional advantage. The distance between the two stores was too great for really effective management, and we fail to see where Winnipeg and Toronto are very much different. The Eaton Co. have the advantage of a large mail-order trade in the west already established, but with Mr. Eaton himself necessarily out of the calculation a good deal will depend upon the kind of management the western store receives.

Keeping in mind the exorbitant price for their Winnipeg property in the first place, and the rush of other dry goods merchants to pre-empt the western field, we can see where even a large concern may not have the smoothest possible sailing. Mr. Eaton is too far advanced in years to be able to handle the situation himself in any way, and unless the new organization can include a measure of his ability, the pendulum of trade and money and success may begin to swing in the other direction.

MONTREAL STORES.

IN strange contradistinction with the Eaton move to Winnipeg is the Simpson move to Montreal. Both illustrate the restless spirit of Toronto enterprise, but while the western store is to be a full-fledged "departmental," the old conservative business of John Murphy's in Montreal is being made even more precise. The situation raises a very fine question as to what kind of an establishment the "coming store" is to be. Looking ahead ten, or even five years, will it be just as easy to keep up the everlasting cry of "bargains," and still figure a profit? In spite of all the boasted enterprise of New York and Chicago stores, we fail to see where they make anything like the money of smaller and more conservative establishments in England. And looking things squarely in the face over here, it may be possible that a reactionary tendency is just about due, if profits are to be considered.

At any rate, the Robert Simpson Co. have surprised everyone by "doing things different," and eliminating everything but ladies' wear in their Montreal store. Thousands of dollars have been spent in fixing up the dress goods, millinery and costume floors, while such stocks as men's clothing and furnishings, tinware and housekeeping helps, are entirely dispensed with. So far as we can measure things, the idea seems to be in line with Altman's business in New York, and with the well-known wealth of Montreal to lean on, the chances ought to be good for satisfactory profits. The fact of a big department store organization swinging in favor of exclusive dry goods is an element to reckon with in forecasting the future of retail storekeeping.

To what extent this move will interfere with the business of Morgan's and Ogilvys' remains to be seen. The three stores are apparently in direct competition, with the chances of success dependent very largely on buying facilities. In this respect the Simpson Co. have an advantage on account of the Toronto store. On the other hand, both Henry Morgan & Co. and James Ogilvy & Sons are pretty well intrenched in public estimation. The old "Colonial House" is a credit in every way to Canadian enterprise, and the quiet dignity of the place has its admirers. Of the two, the Ogilvy store is perhaps more wideawake and more adaptable to changing conditions.

In regard to the more popular trade, things have apparently only just begun to happen. Three years ago there was a chance for quick moves and bold tactics, at the time when W. H. Scroggie began to reach out. With a lease of the entire block allowing necessary additions and improvements the way seemed easy enough, but doubt and hesitation were factors to be considered. Mr. Scroggie himself is a man of decided business ability, but with a bigger inclination for detail than anything broadgauge. With the enlargement of his store an effort was made to catch the inspiration of the Eaton business in Toronto by engaging two of their former managers—Mr. Poole and Mr. Moreland, who remained only about eight months, incidentally giving the impression that the T. Eaton Co. were directly interested in the Montreal store. As regards this Mr. Scroggie had nothing to do, but it is surprising how many Montreal people still insist "that Eaton is back of Scroggie's"—something which both deny.

Personally, and without knowledge of anything that may be, we look for a big surprise in connection with the Carsley business. Trade has been growing away from their location for some time past, and yet no one has made anything like as much money in Montreal dry goods as Mr. S. Carsley. That means he has it, and it means too that he is not likely to let go the reputation and success of many years standing without something of an effort. A new million dollar store in a new location is within the bounds of possibilities, and as Montreal grows—as grow it must—it would not be by any means a bad investment.

Reading between the lines, it is easy to see that the store situation in Montreal is waking up, with a new infusion of energy all along the line. The cleanest and most aggressive business to-day is the new Murphy's, but they need more room. It is the most promising in every way, because of the men and money and organization behind it. The most prosperous is Morgan's, with a clientele of the very well-to-do, and no less than five thousand accounts on its books. But in proportion as things have changed during the past twelve months, things are going to change, and those who expect to have and to hold must do business on something else than the wit of ten years ago.

The establishment of a butter factory in Glencoe is now a certainty. Promoters of the factory were there during the past week looking over the prospects for patronage of such an industry and expressed themselves as more than pleased with the outlook. The Government Dairy Inspector will arrive in a few days to give his opinion as to the most desirable site with respect to drainage and other features. It is proposed to build a factory second to none in the Dominion as regards capacity and equipment.

Mr. Hutchison has been manager of St. George cheese and butter factory, and is a practical man in all branches of the work. He stated that he was much pleased with the outlook for the industry his company purposes planting there. He says the Valley has the finest pasture land he ever saw. The company will have 100 cows just as soon as a place can be built to accommodate them. It is the intention of the company to be prepared to furnish the retail trade of the town with a high grade of creamery butter.

The British Columbia Provincial Fruit Inspector, Thomas Cunningham, condemned a lot of fruit recently. The fruit is stuff from Fraser River points, and even if it is returned, will not be allowed to be placed upon the market. It may be fed to hogs or even used as a fertilizer, but for no other purposes. Mr. Cunningham stated that from the way Prof. Von Dieman spoke of the fruit at the Westminster Exhibition, and of the absolute purity of the fruit there, the farmers should realize what an asset the name of "B. C. Fruit" on a box would be in the market. "The day is coming" said Mr. Cunningham, "and it is not far off, when the brand 'B. C. Fruit' will add 25 per cent. to the ordinary market value of the product."

The Fossil Flour Company's factory was the scene of a disastrous fire on October 6th, causing a loss of over $30,000. The fire caught in a drying machine and spread rapidly, levelling all the buildings in a short time. There are no particulars as to the insurance. This is the enterprise that created much interest at the time it was started some eight years or more ago, by building a pole railway from the mill to the shipping point at Bass River. This railway was largely noticed in the press and pictures of it appeared in leading English magazines. The railway proved a failure, and has been abandoned for five years. The factory turned out two hundred tons of fossil flour last year, and as the stuff is valuable it means a considerable outlay in operating, which will be missed in Bass River if the mill is not rebuilt.

Mr. Andrew Mitchell, a partner of the firm of Walter Mitchell & Sons, of Ayr, Scotland, is a visitor in Montreal during a business and pleasure trip through Canada and the United States. Speaking of the provision trade in which he is engaged in England, Mr. Mitchell speaks highly of Canadian produce. Wiltshire bacon imported from this country finds a ready market in the British Isles, but more especially in England, where large quantities are distributed from the Liverpool and London centres. Some people are still rather prejudiced in favor of the genuine English Wiltshire raised bacon, but the Canadian article is growing in favor, and is about on a par with Irish and Danish goods. Hams cured in Canada for the British trade are well received, though they are not quite "thick" enough to suit all tastes; this, Mr. Mitchell says, was not the packers' fault—the remedy lies in the hands of the farmer, who should, in selecting his stock, choose a breed suitable for the market on which his hogs are to be sold.

According to reports received by Mr. P. W. Hodgetts, secretary of the Fruit Growers' Association, the fruit growers in the Niagara Peninsula have this year found a fine market in the Canadian Northwest, and for the first time regular shipments in cold storage have been leaving St. Catharines ever since the beginning of the season. Tomatoes, pears, peaches, plums, and more recently grapes have been shipped in large quantities, the shipments amounting for weeks past to three carloads a week. Early in the season the returns were not perfectly satisfactory, but lately they have been good, and there is no doubt but that the trade will grow in future years. Some of the cars went as far west as Calgary. The prices realized by the growers are not much higher than are realized in Eastern Canada, but the new market has had an excellent effect from the growers' standpoint in preventing a glut in the local markets and maintaining prices here

Some unexampled shipments of apples are being made from Montreal. On the Bavarian space was reserved for 32,500 barrels on her last voyage. Ontario growers are prominent in the shipments and to watch the barrels, each marked with the name of shipper, place of shipment and species of apple, is a lesson in geography and pomology. A quarter of an hour's observation showed hundreds of barrels of "Maiden Blush," "Pewankee," "Gideon," "Wealthy," and Snows traveling up the gangway. It was noticeable that each barrel bore the mark "Canadian Apples," and the means of ready identification by the consignee in case of poor quality or bad packing. On the Allan liner Bavarian careful arrangements had been made to keep the apples apart from other cargo and individual consignments together. It is one of the advantages of the Canadian route over the American that the normal temperature is just suitable at the time the great apple shipments are made and the northerly route takes the steamer clear of the gulf stream which has been known to warm the hull of the vessel sufficiently to depreciate the fruit.

A SHORT TOMATO PACK.

TWO members of a Baltimore, Md., packing company were in Toronto this week on a pleasure trip. They were Messrs. James and Leander Langrall of J. Langrall & Bro. Although on pleasure bent they did not altogether forget the business in which they are interested and where they could get information in regard to the condition of the canned goods pack in Canada they sought it.

In conversation with The Canadian Grocer they said that the pack of tomatoes in the chief centres in the United States would be light. The acreage, in the first place, was from 50 to 60 per cent. less than that of last year, while on this acreage there was only about a 50 per cent. crop.

"The cause of this," said Mr. James Langrall, "is that last year there was an over-production and last winter the market was so depressed that No. 3 tomatoes were sold at 60c f.o.b. Baltimore or from 5c to 10c less than the actual cost of production. Naturally, in view of this the packers were not encouraged to be liberal in their arrangements for the pack of 1905. There were a great many failures and the banks would not loan money to the weak packers. In consequence of this fully one-third of the packers in the four States of Delaware, New Jersey, Maryland and Virginia made no preparations to pack this year. We make our contracts with the farmers in January, February and March and naturally if we intend to limit our pack the farmers turn their attention to the cultivation of other kinds of crops. This year our contract price was about 22c per bushel and we ourselves paid as high as 90c to 95c per bushel on the open market for tomatoes. There is still a little packing being done in Baltimore, but, practically speaking, operations ceased two weeks ago."

Messrs. Langrall are constant readers of The Canadian Grocer and place a high estimate upon its merits.

CORN CROP EXTRAORDINARY.

RECENT accounts from Iowa, U. S.A., speak of a corn crop beyond all previous records; it is mentioned as exceeding 400,000,000 bushels. It is of no little interest to take note of how this record yield has been attained, especially considering that the weather in that State has been anything but propitious, and that therefore with the ordinary conditions of seeding good results could not have been expected.

The saving circumstance is that so many farmers took heed to the instructions disseminated through the State last Winter by Prof. P. G. Holden. He told them that they were producing not more than two-thirds as much corn as might be produced on every planted acre for the simple reason that they did not plant the best seed, such seed as in most cases they could with due care select from their own granaries.

This was not a novel proposition. The desirableness of planting good seed in order to obtain a good crop has long been recognized and exploited in agricultural circles. But the average farmer regards one kernel of corn as good as another for seed if it is one that will sprout. They do not pay much attention to the selection of the best ears, to the careful screening of the kernels when shelled, so as to reserve only the largest and soundest, nor to the proper preparation of them before planting.

The trunk line railroads, for which the difference between a large crop and a small one makes a large difference in their earnings, appreciated the wisdom of Prof. Holden's methods with more confidence than did the farmers, who read and forgot The companies provided a special car for his uses and sent him over the State to personally meet the farmers in meetings that were arranged and advertised by the railroads, and explain to them his methods. This was done during the late Winter and early Spring.

The professor appears to be a man who can talk in a manner to awaken interest and induce people to heed his emphatic and illustrated instruction. The result was that thousands of farmers made a serious trial of his recommendation, giving time and labor in their leisure season before planting to selecting and preparing the seed far the year's crop.

To this work more than to any other cause is attributed the fact that in a confessedly unfavorable year the State's corn crop is likely to surpass every expectation formed by the growers. Not that there was a greater acreage devoted to corn, but that the acres are yielding more abundantly.

INQUIRIES FOR CANADIAN TRADE.

THE following inquiries for Canadian trade have been received at the Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa. The names of the firms making inquiries with their addresses, may be obtained on application to the Superintendent of Commercial Agencies, Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa.

1034. Inquiry is made by a person with life-long experience in the provision trade with a view to obtaining an appointment as representative, buyer or English manager for a Canadian exporting house.

1036. A firm of English, colonial and foreign agents and representatives are desirous of securing the agency for the United Kingdom of actual producers and packers of Canadian produce, particularly canned and preserved provisions, fruit, fish, vegetables, etc.

1038. The names of manufacturers in Canada of coin-in-the-slot machines, advertising novelties, talking machines, cash registers, etc., are asked for by a London agent open to represent such firms.

1039. An English firm of manufacturers of table delicacies wish to communicate with Canadian packers of canned fruits with a view to handling a special brand in the United Kingdom.

OTTAWA RETAIL GROCERS MEET.

A meeting of the Ottawa Retail Grocers' Association was held on the 9th inst. at the Ottawa Fruit Exchange. Vice-President Booth occupied the chair. It was reported that certain grocers are in the habit of keeping open after 7.30 o'clock, contrary to law. It was decided to ask the chief of police to assist in securing a better observance of the by-law.

The peddling question was again discussed. It was agreed that nothing can be done until the next session of the Legislature. In the meantime Ald. Farmer, who is a member of the association, will be asked to endeavor to bring about more regularity in the peddling trade than at present.

Regarding the complaint that merchants and hucksters were buying on the market before nine o'clock all present declared they had not been guilty in this respect though they were greatly handicapped by the restriction. It was noted that hucksters and pedlars were the principal offenders in that regard.

Complaint was made that permission had been given to James Maloney to erect a portable wooden building on the market at a rate so low that it was unfair to other merchants who had to pay high rents.

TALK ABOUT CANNED GOODS.

DISCUSSION centred around the buying of canned goods at the monthly meeting of the Retail Grocers' Association at the Temple Building Monday night last, and opinions were expressed very freely that the retailers were getting the worst of it by buying canned goods in advance.

President H. B. Kelly was in the chair and a good attendance was present, and after attending to routine business the canned goods question which had been brought up at the meeting in September was again made the subject for the evening's discussion. A resolution was proposed that the members cancel orders which had been placed for canned goods this Fall, but this was considered too radical and voted down. However, the meeting was clearly opposed to the system of buying ahead which has been in vogue heretofore and the opinion was generally expressed that the members had been carrying too much stock, stock which should have been carried by the wholesaler and the manufacturer. Last year for instance it was contended large stocks which had been bought at high prices had been carried over and in the spring had to stand the competition of American tomatoes which had been brought in by some of the jobbers. A resolution was finally passed committing the members of the association to the principle of allowing the wholesaler and manufacturer in future to take the risk and carry stocks, the retailer buying for requirement only.

This sentiment was founded to no small degree on the belief that there would be plenty of canned goods to be had without difficulty this year.

PRODUCE AND PROVISIONS

CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN

AN apparent weakness has recently developed on the cheese market, especially at country points, but this is not a real weakness with declining prices, in fact it might almost be called strength of the situation, paradoxically as it may seem; the fact is, that the cheese factories throughout the Dominion are so closely sold up that only October made cheese remain in the country. With very cool nights, these are not ready for shipment, and the merchants concluded not to bid on them but let the factories carry them for at least another week, until they are better matured, and where any bids were made in country markets they were so low that salesmen rejected them, and consequently sales were few and receipts this week will be very light indeed.

The weather during the first half of October has been exceptionally fine, the pastures were in excellent condition and there is every indication that the quality of cheese made during the first half of October is not only as good, but probably better, than the favorite September make, and as soon as the cheese now on the factory shelves are properly cured they will undoubtedly find ready buyers at very fair prices, and it is only right that cheese should be properly cured before they are offered for sale, but when prices are high the farmers want to turn their product into cash as quickly as possible, regardless of the fact that poorly cured cheese might hurt the reputation of the country's product in the United Kingdom.

The situation remains practically unchanged. British markets report lighter stocks than last year, and we know that our stocks are fully 100,000 boxes of cheese less than at this time a year ago. We also know that last year's stocks were insufficient for the Winter's consumption; against this is, however, the higher price this year, which may have had the effect of curtailing the consumption to some extent, but, after all, a certain amount of cheese is needed for the natural consumption in Great Britain, and if the supply is short prices cannot decline, but they will most likely advance with every order of any importance received here during the season of nonproduction.

The season of production is very nearly ended, and stocks on hand now should be sufficient to supply the consumptive demand until next season opens. If they are insufficient prices must advance so that the consumption is reduced. After all, when a pound of cheese is wanted it matters very little whether it costs six pence or seven pence, or even eight pence. The difference of cost to the consumer is trifling, while it means a great deal to the merchants holding the goods.

Butter is still in fair demand for export. Our stocks are not heavy and, as pointed out before, we need a good deal of butter during the Winter months for our own home consumption. The more the exporters will take the less will be left for us, and we may have to pay high prices later on for our own requirements. The great scarcity of and consequent high prices for dairy butter means an increased demand for creamery butter during the Winter months, when the production is at a very low point and the outlook is decidedly in favor of much higher prices.

LONDON PRODUCE LETTER.

By Our Own Correspondent.

London, Eng., Oct. 7, 1905.

THE market here for Canadian butter is at present of a decidedly weaker tendency, and there is not that inquiry for it which might be expected in the month of October. The fact that c.i.f. prices went up last week is in part responsible for this. Arrivals of Canadian have been lighter than last week, and, while the demand for "choicest" Canadian is fairly brisk at 108s. to 112s., the demand for lower grades is very quiet.

Another reason why there is not much doing in Canadian butter, is that attention is just now turned to Australian. Queensland butter, although not such good value according to some, as Canadian, is none the less commanding more notice, and it seems uncommonly likely that holders here will have to take two or three shillings lower in order to clear out their Canadian butter. Indeed it has been whispered that the wisest man will be he who gets rid of his Canadian butter as quickly as posseble, even though it be without profit to himself. Later on it may prove a positive loss. Houses here are decidedly disappointed with the turn Canadian butter has taken. To-day it is said, a line of western creameries was sold at 103s. on the spot, and considering that they want 104s., 106s. c.i.f., it will be easily understood that there is no profit for the man on this side. This is a severe rebuff to the trade here, and the men along Tooley street are promising to keep away from Canadian as long as Australian is doing so well.

Canadians will do well to note the fact that, although arrivals of Australian butter have not been very large during the past week, it is known that within the past twenty days vessels have left Australia carrying something like 36,000 boxes of butter, and the first shipment of New Zealand's new season's output, to the amount of about 4,000 boxes, will arrive in London early in November.

There is really nothing of interest to report as far as the cheese market is concerned. There is a fair demand, and prices have gone up 1s., now being 57s. to 58s., as against 43s. to 44s. during this week last year. The speculative element is conspicuous by its absence.

There is rumor that there will be a good demand for Canadian eggs during the next few weeks. From now until about February is the best season for Canadian eggs, for the supplies from Russia are about falling off, and, although it cannot be said that supplies are at all short, still there is not that heavy supply which was reported in June last, and which, at one time, amounted to a positive glut, when holders were glad to take any price which they could get, provided there was no absolute loss involved. As a rule, Canadian eggs reach this market in cases, containing 360 eggs, or three long hundreds. In these cases each egg is separated from its neighbor by a partition of cardboard. Some importers, however, prefer to receive their eggs in larger cases, containing 1,440, which are usually laid in shavings. It is thus that Russian eggs are shipped.

Bacon—This week's report is to the effect that the market here is generally quiet. Prices are stiffer than might be expected at this time of the year. Partly owing to the competition from pork, rabbits, and other fresh meats, which become popular with cooler weather, the trade is accustomed to look for lower quotations than are at present prevailing.

Supplies of bacon from all sources are, however, on a moderate scale, and this will have the effect of preventing prices from slipping away.

The position of Canadian bacon on the London market has greatly improved. It is satisfactory to be able to report that the work of Canadian packers is meeting with approval. Especially is this the case with those packers who are shipping their bacon in bales without borax. It is impossible to over-estimate the advantage secured, as far as taste is concerned, by this method of packing. It enables the meat to arrive on this market retaining its finest flavor, and thus to compete on more equal terms with Danish and other non-boraxed meats. It is unfortunately true that some Canadian firms are packing their bacon with a great deal of borax—"simply soaked," to use the actual expression of a correspondent—but they cannot do better than remedy this failing. There is not, as far as is known, any secret as to method of shipping bacon without borax.

PROVISION AND DAIRY MARKETS.

TORONTO.

The condition of the provision market continues to show active demand with suplies generally short.

Hogs continue to come in slowly and prices are holding firm.

All lines of bacon are showing shortage in supply with demand fairly active.

Lard continues very firm, but with no quotable change. Supplies are considerably short of demand.

Fresh meats continue steady with demand normal.

Cheese—The cheese market continues to show general weakness on the board sales. In many instances sellers have refused to close with the highest offers preferring to hold for future sales. It is, however, expected that sales will be effected on a somewhat lower basis and that the market price will steady down and remain firm. Export trade continues to be inactive, exporters showing an inclination to await a lower basis for development of trade.

Provision market generally is steady. Live hogs at the yards are reported coming in fairly well and prices are somewhat easier. Abattoir fresh killed dressed hogs steady at $9 to $9.50. The export demand for bacon has fallen off and trade is quiet though locally ham and bacon obtain good sale.

Butter—Market shows no change. Orders are light, despite the fact that the easier tone of the past few days was thought to stimulate trade. Choice dairy is scarce and Eastern Townships fancy scarce with fair inquiry for same.

Eggs—Are firm and in good demand. Local demand is heavy and holders are getting the benefit of held stocks. Country prices are firm at 18c. to 19c, while 20c. in a jobbing way is best that can be done for straight gathered. No. 2 are held at 18c. to 19c. and selects 23c. to 24c.

Cheese—Although cheese is reported easier at country boards, stocks held here were bought at such high prices that purchasers are not getting the benefit of lower outside quotations. Little October cheese bought at the recent decline is noticed.

WINNIPEG.

Creamery Butter—Conditions are much the same as last week. There is a strong demand and in face of small supplies there is every likelihood of an early advance in price. Under these conditions the market is very firm but there is no quotable change. Selling prices to the trade are quoted as follows:

Finest fresh creamery, in 56-lb. boxes	0 23
" " in 28-lb. boxes	0 23
" " in 14-lb. boxes	0 23
" " in 1-lb. bricks	0 24

Dairy Butter—Ever since the beginning of harvest there has been a marked decrease in the amount of butter offering, and at the present time supplies are very small. Advances seem likely. Produce houses are paying 16c. to 17c. per pound for No. 1 dairy delivered in Winnipeg.

Cheese—Prices are maintained firmly at the recent advance. We quote:

Finest Ontario, large	0 13¼
" Manitoba, large	0 13
" " twins	0 13¼
" " small	0 13½

Lard—Firmly held at present prices. Further advances seem not unlikely. We quote:

Eggs—Produce houses are paying 20c. to 21c. per dozen for eggs delivered in Winnipeg.

HALIFAX.

Provisions—The produce markets continue to attract considerable attention.

Butter—The receipts of local made butter are very limited and the price holds firm. There seems no prospect of any relief in the butter market. At the present time people here are paying more for their butter than in most Canadian cities. Fine creamery is quoted here at 24c. and scarce at that, the retail price in most cases being about 4c. in advance of these figures. Dairy is scarce at 21c. to 22c.

Eggs—Are becoming very scarce. Island stock is firm at 21c., while Nova Scotia varies from 26c. to 30c., the latter price being asked for choice table eggs. There is very little doing in the export of eggs from these parts at the present time.

Cheese—Is quoted from 12c. to 13c. The good pastures at this season of the year form a great inducement to the cheese makers to keep their factories in operation.

Windsor Salt

must not be confounded with ordinary Salt. In quality, it is as high above the common Salt of trade as can be imagined. It won't cake—it is pure, white, dry. There is no impurity in it because of the care taken in manufacturing. It is sifted, not ground. Every particle of it is a separate Salt Crystal. It pays to sell Windsor Table Salt, because it is so good, clean, pure—

it is all Salt.

THE STORAGE SYSTEM.

THIS is a point of great importance, particularly to the eastern houses of Canada, and one which means a good deal to them in ultimate results. Our attention has been drawn to the hesitancy on the part of manufacturers and merchants to avail themselves of the system of "storage" which is so prevalent in the United States, and to which has been largely attributable the expansion of American houses.

We are informed from a reliable source that one U. S. house, which has active business relations with Vancouver, B.C., has its goods stored in upwards of fifty different warehouses at various points with which they do business, in order to have their goods ready to hand for their customers. By this we do not mean that they have actually their own warehouses. They are simply availing themselves of the vast utility of the storage warehouse system. By this means they are enabled to get their goods through to various points at minimum rate and at most convenient times, often saving sufficient in freight to cover the duty charges. Besides which they are there, on the spot, immediately they are wanted by their customer, a point of the utmost importance. They are thus able to secure a much more substantial trade than if their customers were obliged to await delivery of goods.

The eastern merchants who are doing business with the Northwest, and who handle goods, say, from Great Britain, this system cannot fail to be an important one. They could avail themselves of the routes which proved most remunerative, either having them sent through by water route from England to British Columbia, or at through rates by land. This often means a material saving in handling and possibly in securing favored rates.

It is not in our province to enlarge upon this, as the case of each manufacturer would naturally vary according to the points he shipped from, and the goods he handled. In any case the fact that our American cousins have found from years of experience that the system of storage is a vast success, should be sufficient to create serious inquiry on the part of eastern merchants who purpose extending their trade to the new areas opening up in the Northwest.

A NEW TRADING STAMP PLAN.

PROMOTERS of trading stamp concerns are actively making preparations to continue their business after November 1st, when the Dominion Legislation providing for the discontinuance of the issue of stamps becomes effective. To effectually get around the clause which states stamps cannot be issued or redeemed by a third party, a company operating under the name of the General Specialty Co., Limited, with the further title of Affiliated Stores Agency, 124 St. Peter street, Montreal, has issued an interesting prospectus to merchants and the public, which they declare to be perfectly legal.

Montreal, the mecca of trading stamps, is the only centre operated in at present, but it is intended, according to H. E. T. Cook, the manager, that the system be extended throughout the principal centres of Canada. The plan is practically the old system, with the exception that the merchant redeems the stamps himself in order to keep within the letter of the law. The stamps are issued by the agency, with the imprint of each interested retailer thereon, a deposit being required as a guarantee of good faith. The company exacts a commission for its services in furnishing the stamps and doing the advertising. The stamps, redeemable by the merchant, are each worth one-half cent in goods, and one-third of a cent in cash. The co-operation and active interest of the retailer is sought by giving him a share of all profits, in fact four-fifths.

The advantage of this method over the merchant giving his own premiums is not entirely obvious, although the sponsors of the system claim their proposition has been well received. With the exception that stamps of different merchants can be made interchangeable, there is no additional advantage to the collector.

The Traders' Advertising Co., the oldest and largest of the Montreal stamp concerns, advises its patrons credit on all cash receipts returned to them will be given in a "savings coupon account," at the rate of one-half cent. for every cash receipt. This coupon account is to be extended indefinitely after the 1st of November, and they will accept the stamps of certain merchants at the rate of 5 per cent. on the face value of the coupons. Their method is to save the collector any trouble until $10 has been placed to the credit of the collector. Then three options are obtainable—$5 in cash, $8 in goods, or $10 in the Ideal Savings Company.

The success or failure of these proposals can only be proven by time.

CARELESS CANNING.

WE are pleased to note that the attention which we drew in our issue of September 8th to the evils of "Careless Canning" and its serious effect upon the trade of Canada has caused a good deal of comment amongst both the wholesale and retail trade.

Undoubtedly it is a question that calls for immediate and prompt action. That it is a very real grievance with the trade generally the correspondence which has come to hand on the subject clearly proves, and we select from it the following interesting letter from Lucas, Steele & Bristol, of Hamilton, Ont., for our readers' perusal:

Hamilton, Can., Oct. 2, 1905.
Editor Canadian Grocer,
Toronto, Ont.

Dear Sir:—Re careless canning. Was very much pleased to see your editorial a short time ago on the above subject. It is one which should receive the care of both the wholesale and retail dealer. I quite agree with your correspondent that the sale of lobsters for all parties concerned outside of the packer is a most unprofitable one. Complaints come in from time to time of almost any brand one can handle. There is something wrong in the packing which prevents good keeping qualities. We did not get anything like the complaints we get nowadays in years gone by. The loss sustained by the trade, not only in lobsters but in other things of this description, is of far greater importance that we are apt to think. There is no reason why a retailer should be saddled with a bad tin of any description and the wholesaler should make it his business to see that he is not. Let the noble canner put up his goods properly, failing that let him pay for his incompetency and sloppiness.

Thanking you for the interest you take from time to time in trade grievances and trusting all your correspondents will look closely after their interests in this matter of careless canning,

Yours truly,
R. TASKER STEELE.

VALUE OF REPUTATION.

QUEER thing, this reputation. It takes toiling and moiling to get it —takes singleness of purpose and capacity to resist temptation to cheapen, but once you've got it its value is transcendent and can't be computed in dollars or cents. How infinitely better it is to build on a foundation of quality and worth rather than to chase the will-o'-the-wisp of cheapness, which leads you into bogs and swamps. "But my trade won't pay the price," wails some timorous soul. Your trade, dear merchant, is what you make it. If you insistently talk quarter, ten and five-cent brooms, and five-cent brushes, and ninety-nine-cent apples, and fifteen-cent oranges, how in the name of sense can you expect your trade to ask for anything else? Try the other. Talk quality, emphasize worth, lay stress on inherent goodness, and watch the result. Cut loose from cheapness, for you are leaning on a broken reed that will give you a bad fall one of these days. Profit and prestige lie in selling good goods. Is any feeling so all-satisfying as the consciousness that your name stands for the best?—for quality?—for blown-in-the-bottle goodness?—for stamped-on-the-bottom worth?

The successful men are those who have talked quality. There are a number of businesses in Toronto right under the nose of the large departmental stores making anywhere from three to ten thousand dollars for their proprietors. and they are only having about half the worry of the price cutter who usually finds it difficult, even with a larger turnover, to make his business show a net profit of more than one thousand dollars.

THE GOLDEN WEST.

By Our Staff Correspondent.

ALL attention is now directed to the Great West and its enormous crop, and naturally so, as reports from all parts point to the greatest grain yield the west has ever seen. The west, however, is only in its infancy, and greater things may be expected in future years. The average yield in Southern Manitoba, where The Grocer's representative is now traveling, is 25 bushels to the acre; in some places it is as high as 45 bushels. This means a big increase in business to the merchants of the west. The merchants have been carrying the farmers for some time, enabling them to buy more land and machinery, and there is many a hundred dollars' worth of goods out on credit which will now be turned into cash along with increased business.

MANY GOOD CUSTOMERS ADDED.

MINTO BROS., MELAGAMA TEA
Importers, etc.

Toronto, Oct. 17th, 1905.

The Manager Advertising
Department THE CANADIAN GROCER:

Dear Sir,—

In sending you our advertisement to-day we do it with a feeling that every issue of your valuable paper brings us fresh results, and we are free to admit that yours as an advertising medium ranks amongst the foremost. Our trade has made wonderful strides, and many of the good customers recently added have borne evidence to the fact "that they saw your advertisement in THE CANADIAN GROCER." We hope, both for yourse.ves, and for the good that you are doing us, that this good work will continue and feel that the customers gotten through your journal will continue to have no cause to regret having felt disposed to commence business with us. Wishing you continued prosperity, we are

Sd. Yours very truly,
MINTO BROS.,
Per W. M.

The credit business has reached enormous proportions in Western Canada, and the merchants are now making a determined and combined effort to bring it to a cash basis. The Manitoba Retail Merchants' Association are doing a lot of good in this direction, and if their resolution to do a cash business between the 1st of November and March is carried out, it will help much to bring the merchant to a better position financially. Some merchants are doing an entirely cash business with good results, while others claim it is impossible to carry on a cash business in the west.

One of the strongest advocates of the cash business is A. E. Code, of Morris, Man., who has been doing a strictly cash business for over a year now, and says it is a great success. He hasn't lost any trade; he knows exactly where he stands, is not bothered by keeping books, and is free from the worry that a credit business always involves, and is also able to sell at a lower figure, which has materially increased his business. Our readers are soon to have the benefit of Mr. Code's experience, as he has been induced to write a series of articles on these lines, which will no doubt be very interesting to the trade in general, and especially to those in sympathy with this movement.

Travelers are as thick as bees in all parts of Manitoba and the west, and are all doing a fine business. Merchants are all stocking up for the Fall and Christmas trade, which should be a record breaker. There is a tendency all along the line to purchase the better class of goods, and merchants say there is a bigger demand for the high-class article than formerly, which, of course, comes with the increasing prosperity.

The MacLean Publishing Co.'s papers were to be found in nearly every store, and it was great satisfaction to hear the many complimentary things that are being said as to their value and assistance in carrying on an up-to-date and progressive business such as you find in Manitoba and the west.

SALT IN ST. BONIFACE.

A DISCOVERY of the first importance to the people of the Canadian west has been made during the last few days. It has been found that there are large deposits of the best quality of rock salt in the little town of St. Boniface across the river from Winnipeg. A strong company of Winnipeg capitalists is being organized to develop the industry, and interesting announcements may be expected in the near future. The discovery was made by a man from Windsor, Ont., who had been connected with the salt industry in Eastern Canada. Having severed his business connections in the east he went to Winnipeg and spent weeks in the study of the geological formation of the country. At Bird's Hill he found his first indications of salt but evidently not in paying quantities. Following what he believed to be the direction of the vein, he bored for salt in St. Boniface and found it in large quantities. One or two rumors to this effect have appeared in the daily press and have not been generally credited. The Canadian Grocer has, however, what it believes to be absolutely reliable information that the story as given above is correct. The names of the capitalists interested are withheld for the present.

Our western readers will fully appreciate the importance of the discovery, but our eastern readers are probably not so well informed as to the price paid for salt in the west. All salt has to be brought in from the east and freight charges make the price mount up to fancy figures. The price quoted in Winnipeg at present for coarse salt is $1.95 per barrel. Hence the importance of the discovery of salt in the west can readily be appreciated.

Organization work is proceeding as rapidly as possible and the secretary is meeting with encouragement from dealers in every town he visits. This week he has been at work in some of the towns on the main line of the C.P.R. west of the Virden section, the organization of which was reported last week. Mr. Coulson was accompanied by J. E. McRobie, the energetic organizer of the Retail Hardware Association, as the two associations are working together in a strong effort to stamp out the credit evil. The aims of the two associations are in great measure identical, and while it is not likely they will ever unite, it is eminently proper that they should work together in harmony. The credit evil is one which they should combine to stamp out, and it is gratifying to find the two secretaries working together in certain towns.

Evidence of the interest and approval of the banks in the progress of the association was furnished two or three weeks ago in a western Manitoba town. A meeting of the merchants in that section was to be held for organization purposes and there was difficulty in finding a suitable place of meeting. The problem was solved by the kind offer of a bank manager who placed the bank offices at the disposal of the merchants. Not only that, but he addressed the meeting and promised the dealers more favorable treatment by his bank if they would unite in a strong effort to stamp out the evils of the credit system. The association plan of closing books on November 1st and refusing credit until April 1st had his hearty approval. Merchants would put themselves on a sounder financial basis by dealing drastically with the credit evil and the banks could well afford to give such merchants more accommodation. The banker's remarks were pertinent, and worthy of the consideration of merchants in all parts of the west. No doubt the sentiments of the great majority of bank managers were voiced by the one in question.

In some sections the dealers are agreeing to refuse to allow 30 days' accounts to be treated as cash. For instance, in Virden two weeks ago it was decided to inaugurate a strictly cash system after November 1st. Undoubtedly this is the preferable plan as the 30 days' system readily lends itself to abuses, but in towns it is sometimes a difficult plan to carry out. Moreover, there are many 30 days' accounts in existence now which it might not be policy to cut off. The Canadian Grocer would be glad to have an expression of opinion on this point from western merchants.

FALL IN SUGAR.

At moment of going to press advices have been received of a drop in price of sugar of thirty cents per 100 lbs. at points between Moosejaw and British Columbia boundary.

A BALLOON "SURPRISE."

IT is not often that a balloon comes our way, but when it does all is excitement and "surprise." The balloon we are thinking of is certainly a veritable "surprise" and one which every reader of this journal can have for the asking. The Surprise Soap Co. have just issued an addition to their already numerous list of advertising attractions, and this time they appear again to have "hit the mark." It is in the shape of a cardboard balloon made to suspend from the ceiling, and has a very realistic effect, besides being full of speaking illustrations of the washing art. The car of the balloon is composed of a washing tub in which is seated a nigger washerwoman who is assuming well-feigned "surprise" at the loving embrace of her red-lipped lover, with the well known words, "Oh, what a surprise, two lovely black eyes," the "surprise apparently being the bursting of the balloon above and the appearance of a "pickanniny" who throws down a wash tub and a package of "Surprise Soap." This card advertisement hung up in the centre of a well lighted store cannot fail to create a most realistic effect.

Nor is this all; from the other side of the card the observer is confronted with the daintiest of dainty maidens, the very express of "surprise" at the wonderful effect produced on her linen by "Surprise Soap," with the well-known motto, "Makes child's play of wash day."

Every grocer should make a point of at once getting one of these tasty balloons. A post card directed to Mr. Henry Wright, Colborne street, Toronto, will secure one by return mail without charge.

HIGHEST HONORS.

A gold medal was again awarded to E. W. Gillett Co., Limited, at this year's Toronto Exposition in connection with the fine display they made. Goods made by this company are being used to a greater extent right along.

ONTARIO POTATO CROP.

THE potato crop this season has been somewhat attacked by rot, and in many fields the farmers say that about half the crop has been destroyed. The cause of this is probably due to the wet weather which prevailed at times during the summer though it was not thought that it was heavy enough or prolonged enough to give such serious results. The potatoes which are on low land are naturally the worst affected, though in some cases those on the high land are affected in the same manner.

The potato crop is becoming to be one upon which the farmers depend considerably, as in many cases, they are exchanged with city merchants for groceries during the Fall and winter, and the loss to those whose potatoes are affected will be a serious one.

CELLULOID STARCH

is that kind of a combination for the dealer.

When a stock of this well-known brand of Laundry Starch is put in, the grocer feels that he is not taking any long chances. It is distinctly a case of "backing the favorite." He knows it will "move"—and quickly: no bargain sales from tubs at the season's end of miscellaneous nondescripts. What a satisfaction it is to sell a Starch that you know from trial in your own home to be the "real thing."

MARKETS AND MARKET NOTES

Ontario Markets.

GROCERIES.

Toronto, Oct. 19, 1905.

REPORTS generally denote an inclination for trade to decline. On the street trade has been distinctly fagging, probably owing to the fact that up to the present it has shown a good deal of activity.

The retail trade whilst it might be described as being good, has not shown the life and activity that were manifested at the time of our last report.

Canned goods continue to attract active attention, and there is a distinct feeling that present prices form a satisfactory basis upon which to buy.

The sugar market continues uncertain and cannot be described as altogether satisfactory.

Syrups and molasses have been particularly uninteresting since our last issue, and prices remain unchanged and rather of a normal character.

Coffee has shown only moderate interest, buying being reported to be somewhat of a decline on our last report. The universal situation of coffee seems to be somewhat unsettled; whilst European markets are reporting a firmer aspect, American markets are suffering somewhat from an accumulation of spot stocks, although the world's stocks show a statistically stronger position than in two previous seasons.

Whilst the local tea trade is not showing the same degree of interest reported in our last issue, yet it is considered in a satisfactory condition.

Foreign dried fruits are occupying a good deal of interest owing to the expected arrivals of new fruits. As will be seen in our detailed report below the situation in Mediterranean goods is showing distinct signs of change and it is probable that this market will settle down to a better basis at an early date.

Rice and tapioca have shown no change since our last issue and tapioca prices are hardening towards a rise.

Spice has shown little interest and there is no new feature to report.

The honey market is showing signs of strengthening. Demand has been more active and consequently prices have advanced somewhat all round. The feeling in this market is that prices will now continue to strengthen.

Beans have been showing a fair demand, but the market lacks animation. Previous quotations are ruling firm.

The fresh fish market continues to be active and the quality is well maintained. Oysters especially show good favor with the public with demand materially increasing.

Dried fish is uninteresting.

The grain market, as our detailed report denotes, is doing active business, but transport difficulties are making the situation somewhat serious.

The flour market is showing activity with export trade particularly bright and previous quotations ruling firm.

Breakfast foods are getting more interesting as the season approaches.

The hide market has no new feature of development. Business is still on an unsatisfactory basis. Good demand continues, but sales cannot be effected to show a reasonable basis of profit.

Canned Goods—There is little to remark in the situation of canned goods. Orders have been coming in freely and interest seems to be continuing by way of stocking up for the autumn trade. There is still a strong feeling with regard to tomatoes, but we have no quotable change to report.

Sugar—Despite heavy receipts at U.S. four ports, the market has been strong in tone during the week under review and there appears to have been considerable enquiry for Java sugars afloat and nearby, at prices equal to 1-32 on last spot sales. There have also been sales of Cuban sugar at prices showing slight increase. The bulk of Java sugar shipped to Atlantic ports has come to hand, and as supplies from that source for the balance of year will be short. U. S. refiners must turn their attention again to Cubans.

There has been some trade done in new crop Demerara sugar on account of U. S. and Canada refiners including one cargo of 4,500 tons to Vancouver, something quite unprecedented. Some of these sugars have also been placed with the Howell refinery, New York, at a parity of 2 1-16 C and F, equal to the duty paid price of 3 3-4; or 1-8 over recent spot sales of Cuban sugars.

Quotations for 80 per cent. beets, which have been for some time 3-16 to 1-4 above New York cane parity, shows some slight recessions, but these have been only fractional; whilst the recent high quotations were 8-9 3-4. To-day's figure is 8-8 1-4, basis f.o.b. Hamburg, equal to 3.81 duty paid, New York, for 96 test centrifugals.

Recent cables from England report weather unfavorable for crop work, but Lischt makes practically no change in his preliminary estimate. A month ago he estimated the outturn at from 6,285,000 tons to 6,755,000 tons, and on the 13th inst. he cables an estimation of the total production for all Europe of 6,550,000 tons against the 1904 and 1905 crop of 4,706,900 tons, an increase of 1,843,000 tons.

Total stocks in all principal countries at latest uneven dates were 1,017,465 tons, an increase of 156,915 tons compared with the two previous years.

In Cuba, grinding ceased some weeks ago and there have been no receipts at shipping points for some weeks past, while exports have been nominal, averaging from 3,800,000 tons in one week to 15,800 tons in one hour.

The U. S. refiners' meltings for week ending October 10th were 46,000 tons, compared with 48,000 tons the previous four weeks, the reduction indicating a slight falling off in consumptive demand.

In refined there is nothing of interest to report, no change transpiring during the week either in American or Canadian markets. Locally there has been a noticeable falling off in demand which is probably to be attributed to the close of the canning season. Domestic beet sugar has not yet come on the market, but first arrivals are expected any day now.

Syrups and Molasses—The local market has been practically featureless since our last report. Demand has been particularly slow and there is no change in price to report. New York advices denote stronger prices with a good deal of demand on account of withdrawals on outstanding contracts, otherwise there appears to be no feature of interest.

Coffee—The trade in coffee has been somewhat indifferent since our last issue, little demand has been manifested and there is no fresh feature to report prices remaining as in previous quotations. Foreign markets report a general weakening following on the news that the needs for October were larger than had been previously contemplated and expectations are that the estimate for October will be materially exceeded. It is, however, believed that the statistical position of the world's stocks unquestionably shows an improvement over the previous two years. The European markets show a much stronger position in contrast to that of New York, which appears to be suffering by the accumulation of a great surplus.

Tea—The local market for tea is showing good interest and a fair amount of trade has been effected. Prices are ruling very firm for teas showing any degree of quality. Samples to hand continue to show good liquoring properties, but it is somewhat difficult to secure high grade teas out of some of the latest samples, consequently approved teas are maintaining interest at firm prices. There are only a few Japan samples to hand and Japans, in consequence, are fairly firm. This is rather on account of the lack of samples than any inclination towards increased demand. The London market still reports great strength on all favorite growths, and as this market holds the key of the situation it is more than probable that present prices will maintain a firm aspect. In Indians the proportion of choice qualities is much smaller than was being offered a few weeks ago. Prices, consequently, rule high. In Ceylon the situation was similar, all descriptions of tea being keenly competed for.

Foreign Dried Fruits—There has been a good deal of interest in these lines since our last issue and in some instances new fruit prices are ruling.

In Eleme figs quotations have shown an advancement of two to four cents.

Californian evaporated apples are stronger and quotations are ruling on a high basis.

Currants have advanced one cent all round, and domestic evaporated apples are also firmer at eight and a half cents.

There are some very good Sultanas showing and fancy and extra fancy fruits are ruling high, being quoted at from thirteen to sixteen cents.

Valencia raisins are showing a lower basis of price on importation equivalent to half a cent on the price quoted four weeks ago. This has had a bad effect locally, quotations given to buyers for goods which are now nearly one month away, interferes with free buying of spot goods which are more money. It is difficult, however, to get firm offers from shippers as growers are unwilling to deliver fruit at present low price of markets. It is certain that high prices will have to be paid later on, as after all the crop in September is only a full crop, and not an advance, and conditions for completion are good everywhere. The U. S. being a very large Sugar is unchanged, and no new features to warrant either a decline or advance. Most of the buying has been done for the Fall, and jobbers report only hand to mouth orders.

There is no change to report in syrups and molasses, and business is only fair.

Canned goods are dull and the jobbing trade report being busy in making their future deliveries.

In dried fruits there is also a scarcity of news. Brokers report that their orders are either all filled, or nearly so, and report only ordinary inquiries.

Fish trade shows an improvement. The cooler weather having a tendency to improve the demand, and country orders are coming in to dealers. The shell and bulk oyster business is also improving.

There are no changes to report in either rice or tapioca, which are firm.

Provisions generally steady. Butter and cheese show a slight falling off in volume of business done.

Canned Goods—Business is reported very quiet, all jobbers stating that orders are very light and that very little new business has been done besides filling future orders. There are no changes of any kind to note in prices, and no further reports as to the percentage of pack of tomatoes canners will be able to deliver. The same applies to corn. In the canned fish line, such as salmon, finnan haddie, sardines, etc., business is reported as fairly good, though nothing abnormal. We quote :

Sugar—The sugar market unchanged. Business very quiet and both jobbers and refiners report as little prospect for any active revival in the near future. The preserving season is practically over, country merchants seem to be fairly well supplied for present requirements and are shaping their orders on a hand to mouth basis. We quote :

Syrups and Molasses—The situation in molasses this week is unchanged. Business is on the quiet side. Prices are easy and no indications of any advance in the immediate future. The demand for corn syrup shows some improvement, and with the colder weather will no doubt be satisfactory to the trade. We quote :

Coffee—Business locally in coffee is reported as fairly satisfactory. The tone of the market continuing steady; as the colder weather approaches there will naturally be a stronger demand for coffee. New York advices show a very fluctuating market, tending rather towards a decline. Mocha coffees are reported firmer. Messrs. Watt, Scott & Goodacre in their report of date of the 17th say :

During the past week New York option market has declined twenty points. This has been brought about by more favorable conditions for the Brazil crop of 1906; the temporarily congested state of the U. S. market, notwithstanding the decrease in the world's supply, as compared with this date last year; and lack of inclination to support switches on the part of bankers, resulting in selling by Wall street.

While the statistical posifion in general has improved, the American markets are staggering under too much coffee. Nevertheless, it will be several years before the world's production of coffee will again be equal to its consumptive requirements and prices will eventually work to a higher basis. For the present, however, speculative holders have become discouraged.

Brazil market to some extent reflects the New York quotations, and is slightly easier.

Tea—Local market shows steady trade, with firmness as characteristic of all lines. China greens are reported very scarce and the advance reported last week is confirmed. Ceylon blacks also are stronger on the London market, and Ceylon greens are reported higher. The general feeling in the tea trade is decidedly firm and some good active business is reported among the local trade. Brokers say that many offers from their trade are being turned down, thus confirming the general feeling of strength that has developed within the past few weeks. There is nothing new to report in Japans, these teas commanding a fair amount of attention and some trading at the stronger figures noted several weeks ago. We quote :

Foreign Dried Fruits—The jobbing trade report good business in Valencia raisins, figs, and other Mediterranean fruits. Shelled almonds, Malagas, are somewhat steadier. Walnuts unchanged from last quotations. The market for Sultana raisins continues to advance on account of the Smyrna crop turning out smaller than was expected. Some speculative buying is being done by the jobbing trade. The last direct sailing from Mediterranean ports will be made this week, and importers are looking forward to better business on arrival of cargoes, as more complete lines will be available. California evaporated fruits continue strong, and indications point to higher figures on prunes and peaches. Apricots also are quoted slightly higher. We quote :

Spices—The market is showing some improvement in all lines except nutmegs, which are the lowest on record. No change in peppers. It is reported that the Lampong crop is still further reduced. Cloves are irregular though on the whole fairly good business is being done at the fluctuating prices. Ginger is without special note. Local demand is quoted as being on the improve. We quote :

Beans—The bean situation is very strong and a scarcity prevails in the west. Holders are asking $1.50 and not overly keen to sell at these figures. Jobbers here report having orders turned down on them even at this figure. Yellow eyes are firm at $1.60. Holders generally are looking for much higher prices in the near future. We quote :

Choice prime beans	1 50	1 65
Lower grades	1 40	1 50

Fish—The demand for fish of all kinds is improving, especially in smoked fish. Finnan haddies are now being freely ordered by merchants at outside points. Bulk oysters, which have been rather slow sale on account of the warm weather, are also meeting with better demand, and inquiries are coming in generally. Shell oysters are more plentiful and prices a little easier, and there is a wide range in the various kinds. All kinds of salted, prepared and boneless cod are high, due to the partial failure of the fisheries. We quote :

Evaporated Apples—Are in good demand and very strong, being held at 8c. Jobbers are awakening to the fact that higher prices will have to be paid. The situation is extremely interesting and decidedly strong. The fact that American markets are also high, from 7½c. to 7¾c. being asked at American factory points, has a tendency to firm up holders here. Dried apples also are firm and 4c. to 4½c. is being asked for them at country points.

Grain, Flour and Cereals.

Flour—Business on the quiet side: buyers holding off, and this despite the fact that millers are firm. Millers holding up prices on old Manitoba wheat flour. Receipts are light. Local demand is of a hand to mouth character. We quote :

HINTS TO BUYERS.

The Eby, Blain Co., Limited, are offering interesting quotations on new season's cleaned currants.

The Tillson Co. have just put on the market a 5-lb. package of rolled oats. The package itself is one of the handsomest on the market, and as Mr. Millman, their agent, says the presents are a little better than any of the rest, and there is no doubt that this package contains the best rolled oats that can be produced. It has only been introduced the past few days, and already they have sold one car, and another one in transit.

It will be good news for the retail grocers and consumers generally to know that they can now buy the Ontario Sugar Co.'s granulated again, as the new crop is just being marketed. The goods are second to none manufactured, and none tests a higher quality.

Buyers of Spanish onions should communicate with H. P. Eckardt & Co., who are offering exceptionally fine quality.

"Vleena" figs are in stock with the Eby, Blain Co., Limited.

If you have not seen the Shamrock label for sockeye salmon you should. It is one of the finest in get-up and most attractive produced. W. H. Millman & Sons are the agents.

"MADE IN BERLIN" EXHIBITION

BUSINESS men have learned to expect exhibitions of various natures and purposes, either of general character such as the Toronto Industrial Exhibition, or of special purpose like the Pure Food Shows held annually in Montreal, Toronto, and other centres.

It has remained to Berlin, Ont., to institute (at least so far as Canada is concerned) an exhibition along lines most characteristic of the times, when protective sentiment is developing into a spirit of Provincial and even local loyalty.

This week in the large hockey rink of the town a "Made in Berlin" exhibition is being held. Not only is this exhibition designed to interest local buyers in the goods displayed, but each day brings many people from neighboring towns, attracted by single fares on the railway and a musical performance in the rink, as well as by the Exhibition itself.

Of the towns of Canada none probably could make a display of local manufactures which should be as large and diversified, as high in standard of design and workmanship and withal as interesting to the average person as the display being made by Berlin manufacturers this week. The more important manufactures of Berlin include: Furniture, leather, felt goods, shirts, collars and cuffs, sugar, rubber shoes, trunks and valises, pianos, suspenders, boilers and engines, furnaces, office furniture and interior fixtures, robes and clothing, woodworking machinery, gas and gasoline engines, clocks, gas and electric meters, aluminum goods, cigars, beer and automobiles.

The average retail grocer visiting the Exhibition would find many of the exhibits of especial interest to him. If he took any real interest in the appearance of his store or in reducing to a minimum the cost of handling his goods he would probably spend considerable time in studying the exhibit of the Walker Pivoted Bin and Store Fixture Co.

This display constituted an example of grocery store interior and was a model of its kind. At the back was a wall arrangement, showing pivoted bins in various sizes and styles from floor to the height of one's shoulder, above which was arranged shelving of modern construction. In front of this was shown a counter with pivoted bins so placed that when in position they would not project beyond counter edge yet when canted outwards goods could be taken out with ease. The woodwork of the display was of the highest quality, showing what an attractive interior could be made with "Walker" fixtures.

Inasmuch as the grocer has to handle shoe and stove polishes, household oils, etc., the display of the Alpha Chemical Co. could not fail to arouse his interest. This firm has a large booth and on a table in the centre as well as attached to panels at the back they had a most comprehensive display of shoe and stove polishes, ammonia, borax, blues, chloride of lime, harness soaps, etc.

One result of a visit to this Exhibition would be added interest in the woodenware, brooms, etc., made in Berlin.

A. Hertel devoted a display to Klondyke refrigerators, washing machines, enclosed ash sifters, benches, clothes horses, etc.

The Berlin Woodenware Co. included in theirs such lines as extension and step ladders, rocking horses, clothes horses, benches, rolling pins, Indian clubs, etc.

A. T. Schiedel confined his display to brooms and whisks, making a nice showing in a small three-sided booth.

The Standard Broom & Brush Company made a fine showing in small brooms and whisks, their range of the latter line being particularly strong.

A display that could not fail to interest merchants was that of the Berlin Electric Co., who showed an automatic switch, designed to switch off electric lights at any hour desired, thus saving light bills when service is given by meter.

The grocer who handles tobacco would find it well worth while spending a few hours in examining the cigar displays made, as Berlin is steadily pushing forward as a centre in the cigar industry.

The Co-Operative Cigar Co. made prominent in their display their "Lustig," "Big Lustig" and "The Cobalt," the latter being a new line named in honor of the recent mineral discoveries in New Ontario.

A feature of the display made by the Berlin Cigar Co. was the fine lithographs used to advertise their "Baron" and "Buffalo," "Lady Ashley," "El Puerto" and "Canadian Belle" cigars. Some of these pictures are well worth writing for.

Wm. Meinke confined his display to his "Irme" and "Berlin Club" cigars, showing at the same time some of the leaf from which they were made.

Joseph Winterholt had a display reaching from the front of the booth to the ceiling at the back. In a cabinet at the front the brands "Hub," "Joe's Prime" and "Havana Straight" were given especial attention, three fine samples of leaf being also shown.

C. Blankstein had a pyramid of "C. B.," "Startler" and "Allan" cigars, so nicely shown that casual passers generally stopped to examine and hear of the merits of the cigar.

A display of more interest to manufacturers of candies, confectionery, etc., than to retailers was that of A. & C. Boehmer, paper box manufacturers. This firm included in their display paper boxes for practically all purposes, from the ordinary-looking yet strongly-built boxes for shoes to the dainty and highly decorated boxes for candies, biscuits, etc. Some of the art work shown on these boxes was of the highest type, showing that this firm is seeking the patronage of particular buyers.

The exhibitors have reason for congratulating themselves not merely on the success of this exhibit but also on the production of goods of such quality and attractiveness.

LIVING IN VANCOUVER.

Eastern visitors, of whom there have been many in coast cities this year, all remark the comparative cheapness of all articles. A Toronto visitor said the other day, "Why butter and eggs are as cheap in Vancouver as they are in Toronto. At the present time we are paying not less than 25c. for good butter, and fresh eggs are 35 and 40c per dozen already. These prices are not anything extraordinary."

The home production of butter is this year much greater than in any previous year, and though eggs are never in sufficient quantity locally to supply the market, the quantity of imported stock during the Summer has been less than in past seasons.

To Our Advertisers

ON account of Thanksgiving Day falling on Thursday of next week, the SPECIAL FALL GROCER will come out a day earlier than originally contemplated.

Advertisers are therefore asked to send in their copy for this number at once.

All copy should be in our hands by Monday night, 23rd inst., at the latest.

LIQUIDATION OF DOMINION PACKING CO., LIMITED.

The final dividend of 2.71 paid by the creditors of the Dominion Packing Co., Limited, Charlottetown, P.E.I., on October 2nd, must be extremely disappointing to the creditors. The assets are given as $5,125.95, and total liabilities $188,932.94. Although the business was started with a view of securing a Provincial subsidy from the Prince Edward Island Government, that august body refused to make payments. It has been stated that several offers had been made to re-establish the business, one in the neighborhood of $100,000, and it seems a pity that the concern could not have been kept going by the acceptance of this amount and the placing of the affairs of the company on a paying basis.

BRITISH COLUMBIA NEWS.

Vancouver, B.C., Oct. 11, 1905.

ACTIVITY in inquiries as to facilities for establishing flouring mills in Vancouver still continues. One former Washington State miller asks for full particulars this week from the city council, and there have been a number of propositions mooted in the past few weeks. The continued boycott of American flour by the Chinese may have had some influence. Latest advices from the Orient would indicate that the Chinese are making their boycott felt very decisively. In flour the entire business has been cut off, while in the past all the flour used in the Orient has been shipped from Puget Sound and California ports. Nearly all contracts for September shipment have been cancelled.

Potatoes are likely to be very dear and scarce before spring if the present movement keeps up. Reports have it that nearly the whole of the Ashcroft crop has been picked up and that other up country points have sold their crops too. The continued wet weather during September has had a bad effect on the potato crop in the lower Fraser Valley where it is a leading crop. It is said the potatoes are keeping very badly and that will make it impossible to hold them over till later in the winter or till spring. By the next Australian steamer, the Miowera, a large quantity of potatoes will be shipped, demand in the Antipodes being active at the present time and the season being opposite, gives a chance to ship with profit. Prices for Ashcrofts already rule at $24 and $25 to the trade per ton, with better class local highland potatoes at $15 and lowlands at $12.

Apples are very plentiful on the market just now, with prices and quality showing wide range. As high as $1.75 per box and as low as 75c., covers the range. Winter pears are now very plentiful and the quality is good. There is no better keeping fruit as a rule. They are quoted from $1.00 to $1.75 per box. Quinces are not yet very plentiful, and are quoted at $1.25 to $1.75 per box, same size as pear box.

Grapes of local production have been rather plentiful, and from some upper country points and from the Okanagan large quantities have been shipped. This fruit promises to be a considerable factor in the shipments from some points.

An oddity in foreign fruits on this market is a shipment of Jamaica oranges which is to arrive in a day or so. Prices are not yet quoted.

The local produce market shows little activity. Butter has remained steady with a weak tendency because of the quantities of Manitoba and Northwest butter now in store at prices which hold down the price of the local article. Local butter has a certain market, but the demand for strictly fresh butter is not sufficient to allow a premium on the whole local make as it used to be. Therefore, the price remains down near that of eastern makes. Local is quoted about 25c. wholesale, with Manitoba and Northwest at 20c. to 24c.

Local fresh eggs are up, 40c. to 45c. per dozen being asked and all eggs offering at that price readily taken. Eastern store eggs of good quality are selling at 26c. to 28c. in case lots. Stocks are not large.

Fish—Steamer New England reached port on Sunday from the northern halibut banks with but 30,000 lbs. of fish. Rough weather prevailed during the trip.

Tests of the oysters at Blunden Harbor have been made by Mr. T. W. Mitchell, an English expert on oyster propagation. He says that the waters in the lagoons at the head of the harbor are ideal for successful cultivation of the bivalve and that unlimited supplies can be obtained from beds there.

The sockeye run has about ended now. Nothing like it has every been heard of in the history of the salmon industry on the Fraser River. The humpbacks, which usually follow the sockeye and indicate that the run of that variety of fish is over, ceased running first, and the cohoes, the later variety, have been out-numbered by the late sockeyes. One result of the great run this season is that the upper waters of the Fraser have been well stocked and the spawning grounds seeded with ova which insures a good run four years hence.

Prices paid for the fish to fishermen have varied greatly, as the canneries were not all running and at times so many were caught that they could not be handled, though not, of course, to the extent that prevailed during the proper season a month or two ago.

A sailing schooner, the Alden Besse, is to leave port this week for Japan loaded largely with salt salmon put up by Japanese. The vessel is owned by Awaya & Co., of Osaka, Japan. Mr. Shiro Kuroda is the firm's representative in this country, and they own large interests in the fishing and curing plants for salt salmon and herring on the coast.

There are two sections in the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the east and the west, when it comes to considering the re-establishment of old "Rule No. 2" C.P.R. freight regulations. Following the appeal of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, made on behalf of eastern wholesale shippers, for a ruling that this regulation should be replaced in the regulations, and the counter appeal of the wholesale trade here, the B. C. Wholesale Hardware and Grocers' Associations which sent delegates east to interview the eastern portion of the Manufacturers' Association with a view to impressing the justice of their case upon them.

"Rule No. 2" when it existed, permitted eastern wholesalers to mix any freight at hand and ship it west in carload lots, which the western jobbers considered an unfair advantage, and they united in an effort which was successful in having the rule removed. The eastern men have invoked the Railway Commission, and the joint delegation now seeks to induce the Manufacturers' Association to withdraw this request, though the B. C. jobbers put up a strong fight against the restoration of the rule, when the matter was up before the commission at the time it sat here. The delegates appointed to go east were Messrs. J. E. Elliott, of McLennan, McFeely & Co., Limited, Vancouver; C. P. W. Schwengers, of E. G. Prior & Co., Limited, Victoria; John Burns, manufacturers' agent, Vancouver; W. G. Mackenzie, of Wood, Vallance & Leggatt, Limited, Vancouver; J. A. Rickaby, of R. P. Rithet & Co., Victoria.

N. S. Markets.

Halifax, N.S., Oct. 17, 1905.

THE grocery markets continue very active. Prices generally steady. Good sales reported in all lines. The weather so far during the month of October has been remarkably fine, and the roads in good condition for travel, hence business continues to reap the benefit of these favorable conditions. From all points trade continues satisfactory, the orders coming in from the Cape Breton districts being even better than usual.

Sugar—There has been a decline in the price of sugar since last quotations, prices here now being as follows:

Icing (25s) $5.75, icing (50s) $5.70, icing (1-2s) $5.60, cut loaf (boxes) $5.50, cut loaf (1-2s) $5.35; XXX granulated, $4.70; Austrian, $4.60; bright yellow, $4.50; No. 1 yellow, $4.20.

Canned Goods— The low price of canned goods has caused the dealers here to lay in large stocks, and most of the orders placed have been filled with the exception of peaches.

Dried Fruits—Dealers here say that there has been a considerable advance in the price of seeded raisins, and that the new stock when it arrives will cost at least two cents per pound higher than last year. Some small lots of new Valencias received here are jobbing at six cents per lb.

Evaporated Apples—The prospects are that evaporated apples will be considerably higher than the opening price last year. One dealer quotes 7 1-2c. as the price.

Syrups and Molasses—The dealers here still have good stocks of molasses on hand. An advance is looked for, but so far it has not yet materialized.

Fish—The receipts of shore fish are increasing. During the week several vessels arrived with large cargoes. There are also about 20,000 quintals of fish on the way here from Labrador. Labrador and Bay fish are quoted at $5.75 and Grand Bank at $6.00. Sales have been made here of Lunenburg fish at $6.00 and $6.25, for the choicest Lunenburg fish are being firmly held at the prices quoted. Some lots of fat mackerel are quoted at $15 a barrel, unculled, and herring ex vessel, $4.00.

Mercantilable Power

Reputation is the force—the power that makes sales and creates demand. Now, reputation is not the result of advertising, it is personal trial, actual test by the very last court of appeal—the consumer. An article which sells on its reputation is the very best and most profitable kind to handle; its sale is sure and quick, at good prices.

Lion Brand Pickles have been sold on merit alone for nearly half a century. They have been tried by the consumer, and their reputation is established. They look better, taste better, and are better than any other Canadian Bulk Pickles on the market.

BUSINESS PERSONALS.

MR. O. LEFEBVRE, Montreal, proprietor of the well-known "Chinese Starch," has his American branch at 123 Merrimack street, Boston, in good running order. The New England branch is under the management of Mr. A. F. Hogue and business is growing rapidly.

J. W. Windsor, of Montreal, is at present in British Columbia in connection with his business. On his outward trip he visited Chicago, St. Paul, Winnipeg and Calgary, and he goes to California before returning.

J. Lister Nicholls, who during the past few years has represented E. W. Gillett Co., Limited, Toronto, in Newfoundland, passed through Montreal on his way west and favored The Grocer with a call. Mr. Nicholls leaves E. W. Gillett Co., Limited, to enter into business with Mr. R. R. Goulding, of London, Ont., making a specialty of pushing Nu-tri-ola, a family medicine that is enjoying a good reputation in the Western States.

Fred Paradis, Sherbrooke, P.Q., for many years buyer and manager of T. A. Bourque, wholesale grocer in that city, was in Montreal last week on a buying trip with his partner, Mr. Leclair. Mr. Paradis has severed his connection with T. A. Bourque and is branching out in the wholesale grocery and jobbing line with Mr. Leclair, opening up in Sherbrooke. Mr. Paradis and Mr. Leclair are both energetic and hustling young business men and enjoy a large acquaintanceship in Sherbrooke and district, and will no doubt secure a good share of the local and near-by trade. The Grocer wishes them success.

HINTS TO BUYERS.

Train loads of canned goods are now being got ready and in transit from the Old Homestead Packing & Canning Co., Picton. The demand for Old Homestead canned goods has been so great that the factory has had to turn down many orders lately.

The Tillsons have also made an arrangement with the Rolston people of St. Louis, and will from now on manufacture their celebrated Rolston's Breakfast Foods, put up in 2-lb. packages, also their Health Food, put up in 1-lb. packages. These goods are broadly advertised in the leading magazines, and already the demand is surprisingly great. Complete stock of them all is carried by W. H. Millman & Sons.

Manitoba Markets

(Market quotations corrected by telegraph up to 12 a.m. Thursday, Oct. 19th, 1905.)

ALL branches of the Winnipeg wholesale grocery trade show a healthy activity and large orders are being received from all parts of the west. Already the beneficial effects of the introduction into the circulation of the west of a large amount of crop money are beginning to appear; collections are reported very much improved and trade seems to be in a more healthy condition than for some months past. Both the wholesale and the retail trade are in optimistic mood, and there is reason for this optimism.

There are few price changes of importance to note this week. Sugar has been steady since the decline early in the month, and it is a matter for conjecture whether any further declines may reasonably be expected in the near future. The future of the sugar market is very uncertain.

Nearly all the new season canned goods are now on the market; plums and pears seem to be the principal exceptions. Strawberries seem to be very scarce; one leading local house is entirely sold out of strawberries, and they report considerable difficulty in obtaining new supplies. It may be necessary to go to the United States for new supplies of this fruit.

Prices on glass fruit jars are announced this week for next year (season 1905-'06) and they will be found quoted below.

As mentioned last week, the first shipment of new Valencia raisins arrived on the local market a few days ago, and the opening price is $1.85 per box for Trenor's f.o.s. This price is higher than will be charged for the next shipments, which are due in about two or three weeks' time.

Tapioca is still quoted at 5c. per lb., but it is evident that prices have reached their highest, and that the next change will be a decline. Primary markets are weaker.

Beans are quoted lower now as the new stock will be on hand in a very short time, and holders of the old are anxious to dispose of their stocks. Wholesale houses had difficulty in getting supplies two months ago, but they have no such difficulties now.

Canned Goods—Practically all the new salmon is on the market now, and all the new canned fruits have arrived with the exception of plums and pears. These will arrive shortly. Strawberries are already reported very scarce, and at least one leading wholesale house is already entirely sold out. They are finding some difficulty in obtaining new supplies in Canada, and it may be necessary to import strawberries from the United States, as was the case last year with tomatoes. We quote:

Sugar—Since the decline early in the month the sugar market has been steady at a basis of $5.25 per cwt. for Montreal granulated in barrels. The future of the sugar market is still very uncertain and the trade seem to have very little confidence in the stability of present prices. Subject to late changes recorded in our "Last Minute Manitoba Markets," we quote last week's prices:

TOLEDO COMPUTING SCALES

Automatic but Springless.

The "Toledo" is a money saver because it positively stops the giving of overweight.

A time saver because it is Automatic.

A labor saver because there are no weights to lift, no poises to slide, or prices to set.

A trade bringer because it indicates to the customer in plain figures the correct weight of the article he is buying.

It is honest both to the merchant and customer.

The Toledo system costs you nothing because it is paid for with the money you are now losing.

Foreign Dried Fruits—In spite of the fact that owing to the high price of the new California raisins the demand is almost certain to be diverted in great measure to the new Valencias now arriving, the latter are, if anything, weaker in price. The first arrivals last week sold at $1.85 per box for Trenor's f.o.s. First shipments always demand a premium, and the goods next arriving will be somewhat cheaper. The first California raisins are due here about the first of November. We quote prices as last week:

FRESH AND CURED FISH

FISHING ON THE GREAT LAKES.

A CANADIAN Minister, in a recent interview, said: "The whole fisheries question must be looked into not only from a provincial, but also from a national and international point of view; our interests must be safeguarded." There should be co-operation in this question of international fisheries on the Great Lakes.

LARGEST HATCHERY IN THE WORLD.

The Dominion fish hatchery at Harrison Lake, B.C., is the largest salmon hatchery in the world. The little salmon are liberated when they attain a size of about an inch in length. This month something like fifty millions of these small fry will be turned loose to find their way to the sea and grow, in order to be ready for the canning crop of 1909, four years being the regular life of a salmon.

CANADIAN OYSTERS.

The P. E. Island oyster season is now at its height and large numbers of Malpeques are being shipped to the mainland. The first shipment of the season was made by Mr. Gilbert Des-Roches, of Miscouche, P.E.I., and consisted of 325 barrels. The prices are $5 and $6 per barrel. Ordinary flour barrels are used in shipment. On Monday last over 600 barrels were shipped by boat to the mainland.

DOG FISH.

The experiment at Canso, N.S., of utilizing dogfish for fertilizer is proving very successful, and it is proposed to establish plants at other points on the coast.

It is probable that joint action will be taken by the Canadian and American Governments to rid the coast waters of these destructive fish.

FISH GOSSIP.

Reports from North Head, Grand Manan, denote very good catches of herring during the past week, especially at Seal Cove Harbor. Good catches of pollock are also reported.

The Canso, N.S., dogfish reduction works, although running night and day, cannot keep pace with the swarms of dogfish landed daily by exultant fishermen.

The dogfish is becoming a serious nuisance in the waters in the neighborhood of Georgetown, P.E.I., and a committee has been appointed to petition the Government to establish a dogfish reduction plant at that point.

Word has been received from Provincial Fisheries Inspector Babcock, who is now at Seton Lake, stating that he has secured forty-one and a half million eggs at the Provincial hatchery there, ten times the number taken last year.

Reports from New Westminster are to the effect that scokeyes are still remarkably thick on the Fraser River, and the boats average about 400 apiece. By the time they reach the American canneries they are in very poor shape, but they are nevertheless canned. Fishermen are at a loss to account for the lateness of the run which is phenomenal. Humpback salmon have almost entirely disappeared.

It is reported that Deputy Inspector Helgeson, of the Dominion Fisheries Department, has just returned from the vicinity of Babine Lake, where he has been looking for a suitable site for a salmon hatchery of twenty million capacity, which the fisheries department propose to erect in that district. A suitable site has been chosen, but the erection will not take place before next season.

* * *

A new Norwegian fish delicacy is being placed on the market by Dearborn & Co., who have been appointed sole agents for New Brunswick. Vidona consists of the most tender parts of the codfish, specially prepared under a new process, so that the cod is not recognized except in its most delicate flavor. It has been on the European market for some time and is said to have become a favorite and staple article of diet across the water. It is now being introduced into Canada and the United States by R. W. Cooper of London, Eng., the representative of the Stavanger Co., Stavanger, Norway, by whom it is prepared.

A bait freezer will soon be erected in Digby. The Ottawa Government will defray half the expense in accordance with the regular custom. Mr. G. H. McCormack, of Digby, who is the promoter of the enterprise, is desirous of building one large enough to hold 800 barrels of bait. Such a freezer will cost between $6,000 and $7,000 in addition to the site which will cost $1,100. Peter McFarlane, head of the bait freezer department of marine and fisheries, will shortly go to Digby to see how extensive a plant is required. In addition to the contribution of one half the expense the Government pays a bounty of $5.00 per ton, up to twenty tons, for three years, after which the whole plant belongs to the builders.

THE WORDS OF AN EPICURE

"I always like to sample every article of food I hear of so that I may know what is best and most wholesome, and never miss any of the good things of this life. Some things I blackball at once; others I test further to better prove their merit; a few I know at once to be the very thing. I class ACADIA PREPARED CODFISH among the few. You don't have to try it a second time, for its delicious flavor is captivating and altogether it is a splendid food. Anyone who puts off trying it is wasting time. Life is not so long that he can afford to miss the opportunities of rich enjoyment that remain in the eating of 'Acadia' Prepared Codfish."

Nor, let it be added, can a merchant afford to miss the opportunities of rich profit that come from the handling of this healthful and popular food.

EXHIBIT OF ST. CHARLES EVAPORATED CREAM.

MESSRS. S. H. EWING & SONS Montreal, agents for St. Charles Condensing Co., Ingersoll, Ont., are demonstrating the qualities of their products in the S. Carley Co.'s departmental store, Montreal, this week. The Grocer representative paid a visit to the department devoted to this article and found the booth tastefully arranged and the cream being demonstrated to visitors. The young lady in charge is an experienced demonstrator and thoroughly posted in the merits of the St. Charles Condensing Co.'s products. St. Charles Unsweetened Evaporated Cream is claimed to be a thoroughly sterilized and pure milk, and a nourishing food for the young, sick or old. It is said to greatly improve the flavor of coffee, tea and cocoa.

It is prepared from milk obtained from specially selected dairies, and particular pains as to sanitary conditions is taken in its manufacture. It is claimed that St. Charles cream is an absolutely pure article. It is recommended by physicians and nurses, as the many notable testimonials possessed by the company substantiate, particularly that of Dr. Walter S. Haines, professor of chemistry in Rush Medical College, Chicago. Some of the uses to which St. Charles cream may be put are as cream for fruit, making ice cream, cream confectionery, puddings, custards, and other desserts. That the consumption of condensed milk and cream is increasing in wonderful strides is evident to every up-to-date grocer, and the demonstration of the merits of St. Charles Evaporated Cream by Messrs. S. H. Ewing & Sons is a step in the right direction. Medical health officers of every city and town in the country are united in attributing much of the sickness with which they have to contend to the irregular and imperfect, as well as impure, milk supplied the public. It is claimed by the company that the use of an article like St. Charles Evaporated Cream will greatly reduce this danger. It is therefore clearly the duty of every one catering to the public to take particular note of the utility and use of these condensed milks and creams. The St. Charles Condensed Milk Co.'s exhibit in Carsley's is undoubtedly a splendid educative feature.

In the booth are displayed the premiums given by the St. Charles Condensing Co. to the trade. These are valuable, consisting of gold watches, clocks, postage scales, daters, etc. Coupons to redeem these will be found in every case, also list of quantities and premium list.

A NEW MANAGER IN CHARGE.

Mr. Wm. Shoemaker, late of the Chicago office of Armour & Co., has been appointed manager of that company's branch for Canada, located in Toronto, succeeding Mr. C. L. Jones, who has been in charge of the Canadian branch for some time. Mr. Jones goes to Boston. Mr. Shoemaker reports that he finds conditions very satisfactory, and is pleased with the outlook in Canada. With their new factory at the foot of Jarvis street, Armour & Co. are now in a position to handle their Canadian trade in a satisfactory manner, and have recently added Savoy Condensed Soups to their other regular lines.

A HOLIDAY PARTY.

A jolly party of Toronto grocers, Messrs. H. D. Kelly, David Bell and Bailey Snow, have returned from a week's trip to New York. They took in what is left of Coney Island, the Hippodrome, and other features of metropolitan life. They talk of repeating the trip next year.

Quaker Canned Goods

We finished packing Corn on the 6th this month and Tomatoes on the 13th. Taking the season altogether it has been the most favorable for quality we have ever experienced, the weather being about perfect all through the season for maturing vegetables in splendid condition. This applies to all lines, commencing with Peas and running right along into Beans, Corn and Tomatoes. With the fine quality of canned goods this season and the moderate prices there should be an enormous increase in the sales over previous years. While the pack has been large it does not exceed in our estimation the pack of two years ago in any line. Of course, we cannot speak for the whole country, but we know this applies to our pack. Judging from this we believe every case of Corn, Tomatoes, Peas and Beans packed will go into consumption before new goods come on the market next year. The fine quality of the goods alone this year over previous years should make an enormous increase in consumption, to say nothing of the much lower price the consumer can buy goods compared to the last two years. We packed thirteen thousand cases of Sugar and Cream Corn. This is a new line for us and is as fine in quality as the name denotes. We expect with this 13,000 cases sprinkled between the two oceans to lay the foundation for a trade in this line that will take the entire capacity of one of our factories next year to cater to.

DOMINION FRUIT CROPS.

WIND storms during September have caused a falling off in the crop of winter apples, according to the monthly report of Mr. McNeill, chief of the Fruit Division, Ottawa. The report gives the following additional interesting information about the general fruit crop:

Apples—Apples will be freer from scab, but with more wormy specimens than last year. Early varieties have been marketed at good prices and few losses. Winter fruit is in excellent condition.

Plums—The weather conditions have materially favored the plum crop. In all large plum producing sections a medium to full crop is reported. Italian prunes in British Columbia promise to be a favorite orchard fruit.

Grapes—The good indications for grapes throughout the season have been maintained; they are being packed and shipped very rapidly. Prices and conditions have been very satisfactory.

Pears—Very few have been exported, and the local markets have not been well supplied.

Peaches—The situation in peaches is thus described by one of the largest wholesale dealers in Canadian fruit:—"A newspaper report emanating from Toronto at the beginning of the peach season asserted that there was an enormous crop of peaches, and, notwithstanding the official report, this view of the crop conditions was accepted by the general public. The result has been that the pubilc have been waiting for the cheap peaches. Sales have been much smaller than in previous years, and many people, who would have been willing to pay the not exorbitant price now asked for peaches, have waited so long that it is doubtful whether they will be suplied at all. Such reports are detrimental alike to the producer and consumer. Only a few designing dealers can gain anything by them." The quantity of No. 2 peaches is much larger in proportion to the whole crop than usual.

Prices—A very wide range of prices is noticeable. As low as 75c. per barrel for apples on the trees is reported and as high as $2 per barrel. The average price was about $1.25 on the trees at the first of the month, and rising until later prices are reported at $1.50 per barrel. Growers are offered for barrelled apples in Nova Scotia $2.50 to $2.75 for Gravensteins and $3 for Ribstons, Blenheims and Kings.

The shipments from Montreal aggregate to the end of September 105,000 barrels and 3,126 boxes.

Foreign Crops and Markets.

The foreign reports continue to indicate a shortage in apples in France, Belgium and Germany, as well as in Great Britain. The latest reports of the United States Department of Agriculture show no improvement in the apple crop. Everywhere it is reported light. There is likely to be heavy movement of apples from the Western and Southwestern States to the large eastern markets, there not being enough in the vicinity of these to supply the home demand.

Peaches and pears are everywhere plentiful; plums and grapes are at least an average crop, so that the lack of Fall apples is not so serious a matter. It is a fair inference that when the market is clear of Fall fruit there will be an increased demand for apples.

APPLES.

THE crop of apples in Canada and the United States seems from all reports to be very much under the average yield. The falling off must be about 40 per cent. As a consequence buyers are very eager to make contracts. Good apples will be in great demand later on and those who hold their stock till then will obtain much more than the present prices.

In some parts of New York State pickers are paying as much as $2.25 to $3.25 for fancy Spies, Kings, Gravensteins and Duchess, the latter price being, of course, for exceptionally fine fruit.

In Maryland and other parts of the Union the same condition obtains.

Ontario fruit bears the best reputation in the west for flavor, and there is no reason why it should not ship large quantities to Winnipeg.

One of the causes which have militated against this trade is the fact that a good deal of the fruit has been picked too green. The greener the fruit at the time of picking the greater will be the heat generated when placed in packages. Several cases have occurred showing a temperature of 75 and 78 degrees when the surrounding temperature was 50 to 60 degrees, whereas when properly cooled it has been got down in some cases to 44 degrees.

The short supply will certainly cause higher prices later on. It is not meant that there will be a marked advance on American prices, but we believe that, after making due allowance for freight and insurance, the price in Liverpool, which is now $4.00 to $5.40, will warrant higher prices than are now being paid in the district.

BEAN REPORT.

Reports from Ridgetown indicate there will only be half a crop of beans this Fall. On the other hand there is a phenomenal crop in Michigan and beans from that State can be delivered in Elgin County as cheap as they can be bought locally from the farmers. Export prices will be uncertain till the condition of the European crop is definitely known.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

TORONTO.

Green Fruits.

THERE still continues a good deal of interest in fruits. Domestic arrivals are showing considerable decline and the local public market is closing down this week, in fact at the present moment it is practically closed.

Almeria grapes have arrived and are considered to be very fine fruit. Prices are ranging from $6 to $7.50. Mr. Despard of White & Co. reports that at the recent sales at New York, at which he was present, arrivals of these grapes were showing very fine quality and sold at high prices. Only in one instance did a cargo show damage through too hasty packing at primal points.

Florida oranges are added to our list at $3.75 per box.

Early black cranberries are also now in evidence on the market at $10 per barrel.

Vegetables.

The vegetable market is showing a degree of quietude greater than is usual at the present season. There is little of interest to report since our last issue. Jersey sweet potatoes have stiffened and are inclined to an upward tendency. Spanish onions have advanced 25 cents per case and tomatoes have also stiffened and are showing slightly advanced quotations.

BUSINESS PERSONALS.

MORSE BROS., of Canton, Mass., manufacturers of the well known Rising Sun Stove Polish and Sun Paste Stove Polish, advise us that their sales of both of these articles have increased wonderfully during the past year and their popularity is not confined to any particular section. The high quality contained in both of these articles has become generally recognized by housewives in every part of the country, and as the manufacturers are firm believers in the value of advertising and expend an enormous amount of money every year in assisting the retailer to sell the goods, it is not surprising that the demand should reach its present large dimensions. The Sun Paste Stove Polish is guaranteed to the trade and the retailer is fully protected by the manufacturer's guarantee.

FLOUR AND CEREAL FOODS

"SWEAT" IN WHEAT.

THE absence, which has been noted and so often remarked upon, of that old-time nutty flavor in wheat bread is said to be due not so much to milling methods or deterioration in the wheat itself, as to the methods employed on the farm, and is attributable to the haste on the part of the farmer to get the wheat threshed and marketed. Old-time millers claimed, and claimed justly, that wheat is bound to go through a sweat. It will sweat in the stack, the granary or the flour bin, and the best place is the stack. But while endorsing the view that wheat should be stacked, it is rather doubtful whether the views of the old-time millers have confirmation in fact.

Possibly the above statement is not exact and scientific. But it is not fiction nor superstition. Nature does make some effort, which has popularly been called "the sweat." It is not denied that it takes place in the stack or barn. Few will contend that it does not sometimes occur in the granary, and something analogous to it certainly takes place, at times, in flour made from wheat which has not been cured. That the modern plan of threshing from the shock may be responsible for some of the troubles always experienced with new wheat we do not doubt. Were it universal, the troubles would be more pronounced. As it is, wheat is mixed in the average mill more than ever before; that is, the wheat ground in a day in most mills comes from a greater number of fields and localities than was formerly the case. This is due to the new ways of handling, both in mill and elevator. It minimizes the trouble rather than increases it, and reduces the opportunity for observation which the old-time miller had. But the sweat is no fiction, whatever scientists may say about it.

A NEW GRAIN ASSOCIATION.

PRESIDENT STRONG, of the recently organized Alberta Grain Association, declares that preparations will at once be made to become independent of the Manitoba grading. An inspector has been appointed for Calgary and a distinct grading can be established. Wires will be received from Fort William each morning for the association. It is estimated that two million five hundred thousand bushels of Fall wheat was produced south of Olds this year, and that next year it will be close to five million bushels.

Alberta red is the name to be given this variety in contradistinction to Turkey red and Nasas red. The milling capacity south of Olds by Spring will approximate 2,500 barrels daily. An effort is to be made to concentrate the milling of all Alberta grain in Alberta. Alberta will join with Manitoba in handling the Canadian Pacific special grain trade in January, when the Dominion Government will provide experts to lecture to the farmers of the west. Twenty-five stops will be made in this Province.

STACKING GRAIN.

At Riding Mountain, Manitoba, most of the farmers are stacking their grain, preferring to get Fall plowing done, and defer the threshing till after freeze up, therefore the exact yield is not yet known, but the sample is mostly No. 1 northern. An enterprising miller would find a good opening here. A liberal bonus is offered; there is only one grist mill within twenty-five miles.

GRAIN DEALERS COMPLAIN.

A MEETING of grain dealers and millers was held recently at the Board of Trade, Toronto, and vigorous complaints were made as to the grain blockade and the lack of cars.

Archibald Campbell, M.P., said there was very serious cause of complaint in the lack of facilities for getting in grain from lake points. Grain ordered out three weeks ago was not delivered yet. An instance was given where a Toronto merchant, after waiting for cars for some time, went up to find out why they did not arrive. He was told that there were 160 cars ahead of him. When he went up the following week he was told that there were 200 cars ahead of him then.

The railways, it was said, discriminated between grain shipped for export and grain shipped for the Ontario millers.

It was suggested that a specific case or cases be brought before the Railway Commission.

A resolution was passed that the matter be laid before the Railway Commission, asking them to deal with the matter and see why the railway companies were not supplying sufficient cars, and why preference is given to grain exports and especially American grain, contrary to the Railway Act.

A committee composed of Messrs. Campbell, Lewis, Ellis, McNairn, Pearce and Baird was appointed to deal with the matter.

READ BETWEEN THE LINES OF SMOKE

The test-plan of

superior saleability is as follows: Order a small amount of the ten leading tobaccos being sold to-day. Arrange them on an equable basis and instruct your clerks to keep tab on the sales. You will find there will be more voluntary asking for T. & B. than for any other of the represented tobaccos. A few of the smokers will have no choice and T. & B. will get a share of this trade, too. A few smokers will come in intending to buy other tobaccos, but the sight of T. & B. will conjure up old memories of satisfaction and delight, with consequent winning over. You can read between the lines of smoke that T. & B. must have a great reputation and must be known everywhere. You will not need an affidavit for proof.

TOBACCOS, CIGARS AND ACCESSORIES

TO PUSH TRADE.

A DRUGGIST in a small town out west worked a novel cigar-selling scheme some little time ago in the following manner. He found a stray nickle on the floor of his store one morning and resolved to post this notice on the window of his store :

"A sum of money was found last Tuesday in this establishment. The owner will receive same within upon describing the money."

The scheme worked like a charm. Hundreds of citizens came in daily for over a week, while the notice was left in the window, describing their losses and bewailing their misfortune. Invariably every applicant for the lost money bought a cigar. Some were satisfied with 5-cent straight whiffs, but the great majority anxious to impress the drug man favorably towards their claims invested in two for a quarter. So great was the rush that the druggist had to order a fresh consignment of choice brands. None of the applicants ever applied for the nickle. All the claims ran up into the hundreds of dollars, one man stating that he had missed his bank book with $1,500.

A WRINKLE FOR CANADIAN GROCERS.

THE newest wrinkle in tobacco growing is seen in the Connecticut Valley, where the crop this year has been of "bumper" proportions. In many of the fields a score of plants have been left uncut to perfect their seed and have been covered with what appears generally to passengers on the New Haven Railroad as sun-bonnets.

These seed flowers, in accordance with experiments made in this region, have, in many instances, been shrouded with manila paper bags, of the kind that ordinarily contain twelve pounds of sugar at the grocer's, and tied tightly at the bottom with a piece of white cotton string. So that long after the leaf plants, whose heads were cut off early in the season, have all been harvested, these lofty sentinels of their tribe, destined to reproduce their kind for next year's crop, have stood waving in the September breeze, wearing these caps.

The principle, of course, is simple enough. The paper bag does not materially hinder the flower from reaching maturity, while it does prevent the wandering bee from depositing pollen from another plant in another field on the reproductive portion of the scarlet and white bloom. In other words, the flower is obliged to fertilize itself, as the botanist's phrase is ; cross fertilization is cut out altogether.

Only the best plants in the field are selected, and the seed obtained, when self-fertilization is necessitated by the use of these caps, produces plants of exactly the same type, even the slightest peculiarities reappearing.

Both scientists and practical farmers believe enthusiastically that after the practice has been followed a few years definite types of practically perfect tobacco plants will have been established —something that is impossible while the pollen from one field may be distributed into another field, producing all sorts of varieties and accidents.

U. S. CIGAR SMOKING.

HOW powerful is the spell cast by nicotine in the United States can be seen by the statistics just printed by Tobacco Leaf, an organ of the tobacco trade. According to this authority there were manufactured in the States during the year ending June 30th last, no less than seven thousand five hundred millions of cigars.

There are estimated to be some 24,000,000 males of smoking age in that country ; this therefore means about 320 cigars a year for each of them. But there must be several millions of Americans of smoking age who don't smoke, and millions more who smoke pipes and cigarettes, but not cigars ; and it would probably be within the mark to estimate the average annual consumption of cigars by American cigar-smokers at 1,000.

In comparison with the cigar output, that of cigarettes was small—but little over three thousand millions. When it is considered that the smoking of cigarettes is not confined to men, but is shared by boys and women, and also that it takes several cigarettes to equal one cigar in tobacco power, it will be seen that the consumption of cigarettes in the States is insufficient in comparison with that of cigars as an indication of the prevalence of the tobacco habit.

The amount of smoking tobacco produced was about the same as the amount of chewing tobacco—fourteen pounds to each male of smoking age.

Estimating the average weight of a cigar at a fifth of an ounce, it will be seen that our neighbors smoke in pipes and chew about eight times as much tobacco as they consume in the form of cigars.

SMOKING IN JAPAN.

THE clerk who sells you a stamp at the postoffice in Japan, the cashier who deals with your circular notes at the bank, the official who "vises" your passport, the customs officer who looks at your baggage, all have a cigarette between their teeth or puff at a pipe. You will even see a nursemaid indulging in a quiet pipe while her baby charge sleeps.

In fact, Japan is now looking to her smokers for financial salvation. The interest on the new loan, and the heavy war expenditure, will largely be defrayed by the taxation of the tobacco monopoly and the liquor trade.

A tourist recently returned from the Land of the Wistaria declares that he does not remember a single non-smoking Japanese male, and met very few women who did not smoke. Yet, he says, he never heard of a case of a Japanese suffering from what is known as a "tobacco heart" or "smoker's blindness."

Japanese women are great smokers,

All First-Class Grocers

though the habit does not seem to lessen their womanliness or destroy any of their charms. Two or three dozen cigarettes a day seem to have no effect in sullying the gleaming ivory teeth or dulling the brilliancy of the soft almond eyes of those fair devotees of Lady Nicotine. It is not considered at all a rakish thing for Japanese women to smoke. A pretty, well-bred girl of 18 will produce her tiny silken pouch and dainty silver pipe with as much matter-of-fact calm as might a man of 50.

WARNING!

BM&Co. TRADE MARK.

SODA-CRYSTALS (WASHING SODA)

Foreign Soda Crystals—and some of English manufacture—are being extensively offered for sale in this country which are grossly adulterated with Glauber-Salts (Sulphate of Soda), a cheap product which is not only entirely useless for washing purposes, but is even likely to injure the fabrics with which it comes in contact. The Adulterated Soda-Crystals, although nominally lower in price than BRUNNER MOND'S PURE SODA CRYSTALS, are in reality much dearer owing to the large quantity of useless and injurious matter which they contain.

GOLDEN RUSSET BRAND

WILSON WAYS

3. PRICES PROPORTIONATE

It would be a hard knock at our "purity" and "inimitable" arguments if we took advantage of the secrecy of our process and put a monopoly price on the product.

GOLDEN RUSSET VINEGAR

price is just as honest as GOLDEN RUSSET VINEGAR process. Compared with some other vinegars it should be three times the present price. Skilled labor is necessary in the manufacture of GOLDEN RUSSET VINEGAR; also expensive machinery, expensive fruit. Yet you can put GOLDEN RUSSET VINEGAR in your store at a fair price, sell it with profit to yourself and unlimited satisfaction to your customers.

If you have Money to Burn

Why! Go burn it. There is 10 times more satisfaction in burning money than in losing it in driblets, through carelessness of clerks, or disputed accounts. Who that has "pass-book" customers has not had accounts disputed and partially repudiated? The best way to avoid all complications and misunderstandings is as follows:

IF A MAN WANTS CREDIT

for $10, give him a $10 Allison Coupon Book, charge him with $10, and there you are. No trouble at all. If he buys a plug of tobacco for ten cents, just tear off a ten-cent coupon—that's all. And so on for all his purchases up to limit of the book. NO PASS BOOK. NO WRITING. NO TIME LOST. NO KICKING. There are other Coupon Books, of course, but why not have the best? Let us send you a free sample.

From January to December you have it drummed into your ears of the superiority of such-and-such teas over the teas of Japan.

One would think that the Supreme Architect of the Universe, after providing the people of Japan and the East with the refreshing healthful teas of Japan, had suddenly turned all the virtues of the tea plant into jungles and hills of a lonely cast-off Island.

Don't be mislead—the teas of JAPAN are the purest and healthiest, as well as cleanest grown on earth—and they pay you best to handle.

SODA-CRYSTALS (WASHING SODA)

Foreign Soda Crystals—and some of English manufacture—are being extensively offered for sale in this country which are grossly adulterated with Glauber-Salts (Sulphate of Soda), a cheap product which is not only entirely useless for washing purposes, but is even likely to injure the fabrics with which it comes in contact. The Adulterated Soda-Crystals, although nominally lower in price than BRUNNER MOND'S PURE SODA CRYSTALS, are in reality much dearer owing to the large quantity of useless and injurious matter which they contain.

September 1905 Sales of BABY'S OWN SOAP Have Exceeded Those of Any Other Month.

Owing to our having been delayed by our printers, we were unable to place our prospectus in the hands of the trade until the middle of September.

We have decided to wait till

October 31, 1905

before offering any shares in Albert Soaps, Limited, to the public.

Until then only dealers in Soap have the opportunity of subscribing for this stock at par (shares are $50.00 each).

One of the main objects of the formation of this company was the chance it offered to interest dealers in soap in "Albert" products, and to help them make more profit out of the sales of these goods.

Quite a few dealers have made enquiries, but more have not done so.

We know that investors are seldom offered the chance which we are now offering—and we make the offer merely because we know that dealers will want to help a concern they are interested in—and will not need urging to sell Albert Baby's Own Soap when asked for it, if they are shareholders in Albert Soaps.

On the other hand, every shareholder who does sell a bill of Albert Soap will be helping to increase the value of his own property.

Albert Soaps, Limited, will probably pay dividends in excess of 7% per annum.

If you have not already received a prospectus we will gladly send one on request.

"The Memory of Quality Remains"

"The satisfied customer is the best advertisement." A generality, you say—may be—nevertheless the vital truth remains, that the Grocer who gets the particular, exclusive trade is the Grocer who sells the goods that guarantee satisfaction—S. H. & A. S. EWING'S Delicious COFFEES and High-Grade SPICES have helped make satisfied customers for discriminating Grocers in increasing numbers for over half a century. Does it pay to handle inferior or questionable goods? Some merchants say: "Oh, I'm handling such and such a line of Coffees or Spices. They are good enough and suit my trade." Perhaps they do—but did it ever strike you that with a better class of goods you might largely increase your trade with the best classes of particular people? Remember, you are not experimenting when you place an order with the old reliable house.

GOLDEN RUSSET BRAND

WILSON WAYS

TRUSTED TRADE

One thing which distinguishes "GOLDEN RUSSET VINEGAR" trade from "other vinegar" trade is that while it may come no faster it stays a good deal longer. Not only do most pickle manufacturers use exclusively, but the number of householders using it exclusively, also, is increasing each year. You may not notice because you do not taste, but "rank" Vinegar sooner or later gets its deserts, which means that the axe falls on 'rank" vinegar trade. Wilson customers are firmly wedded, so Wilson trade is trusted trade. A grocer could do more profitable business carrying GOLDEN RUSSET VINEGAR alone than he could carrying all the acid vinegars on the market, even if he got them at half-price.

"ENTERPRISE" PAYS

The buzz of customers—the ring of the cash register—the clink of coin increase in a grocery store that is Enterprising in methods and equipment. An "Enterprise" Electrically Driven Coffee Mill decreases expense, increases business. A novelty a few years ago, now a necessity in every grocery. :: :: :: :: :: ::

The illustration shows our mill No. 83 fitted with ¼ H.P. motor, furnished for either direct or alternating current. It is 30 inches high, 22 inches long, 14 inches wide and weighs 115 pounds.

The nickel-plated hopper has a capacity of 4 pounds of coffee. It will granulate 1 pound of coffee a minute or pulverize ¼ pound a minute. Each machine is equipped with pulverizing grinders and can be regulated for fine or coarse grinding while running.

We will be pleased to send prices and practical suggestions; also our catalogue showing complete line of Mills, Food Choppers and other "Enterprise" grocers' specialties.

TOLEDO COMPUTING SCALES

Automatic but Springless.

The "Toledo" is a money saver because it positively stops the giving of overweight.

A time saver because it is Automatic.

A labor saver because there are no weights to lift, no poises to slide, or prices to set.

A trade bringer because it indicates to the customer in plain figures the correct weight of the article he is buying.

It is honest both to the merchant and customer.

The Toledo system costs you nothing because it is paid for with the money you are now losing.

Made in Canada

These words are the key to the success that every true Canadian heartily desires for this fair Canada of ours!

Why should we buy goods of any description that are made in a foreign country? The making of foreign goods does not give employment to our artisans. It does not retain money in this country.

Why use Foreign Salt? We have CANADIAN SALT that is superior to any foreign salt that is made.

Why not help build up Canada by using

Canadian Salt

and thereby employ Canadian labor, Canadian works, and Canadian capital?

A "TURNER" TALK

THE name of a firm does not necessarily indictate what kind of treatment would be accorded you by the proprietors, any more than does the horrid stench of escaping gasoline from a passing automobile indicate its speed, but when you become acquainted with the proprietors and in closer business touch with the firm and their style of doing business then you will realize when you see the name that it is significant of courtesy and business attention.

We attribute our success in business very largely to our style of despatching orders. Merchants all over Canada, and especially in the Far West, will testify that orders being filled by JAMES TURNER & Co. reach them far in advance of purchases made from other firms.

These facts are well worthy the consideration of merchants who are yet unacquainted with our style of handling orders.

Is it possible to imagine anything more annoying in business than to find the counters of your competitors piled up with the choicest of new goods, while you are making inquiries from day to day, only to be informed that they expect the arrival of your goods next week?

Another, and most potent factor in the success of our business is that we handle the choicest goods that Old Mother Earth presents to her people. The traveller who endeavors to persuade you that an inferior article, at a less price, suits your trade insults your intellegence. There are no schemes that man's imagination can devise for building up and maintaining trade equal to the handling of good goods, and nothing can be more disastrous than dealing in shoddy.

The fruit season is now on, and it affords us much pleasure to state to the trade that this season's importations will exceed all former ones. We will have in our warehouse the choicest selections from the markets of the world.

DEVELOPMENT OF RETAIL TRADE IN WESTERN CANADA

WESTERN retailers are showing the trade in other parts of Canada an example worthy of imitation in the enthusiastic way they are supporting the Retail Merchants' Association of Western Canada. Readers of The Canadian Grocer in all parts of Canada are familiar with the methods and aims of this association, but. perhaps, the time is opportune for a short sketch of the history of a movement which is taking the trade of the west by storm.

Practically all the country merchants in Manitoba are now in line, and the movement is taking hold of the new Provinces farther west. In another year it is likely that Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. will be thoroughly organized.

T. J. Lawlor,
President of the Retail Merchants' Association of Western Canada.

Retailing in the west presents many problems, and the lot of the country storekeeper is not always to lie down in a bed of roses. Dealers have held themselves and their business too cheap, and have themselves been responsible for most of the difficulties with which they have had to contend.

To no class of men does the west owe more than to the country storekeepers. Where the first settlers went, there went the general store man with his varied stock of necessities and luxuries, and that stock was the only source of supply to be found for miles. Perhaps in some cases the storekeeper abused his quasi-monopoly, and charged too much for his goods, but whether that be true or not there is no doubt that in most places the customers abused the friendship of the storekeeper and were given very long credits. In the development of the west the retailer who gave long credits to customers who had no available funds, and the wholesale houses who carried the accounts of the retailers, being themselves accommodated by the banks, played an important part. The west owes very much to those country storekeepers.

In course of time, as the country developed, many stores were started and competition became intense. In many towns and villages there was over confidence in the prospects of the immediate future, and more stores were started than the volume of business warranted. Competition became very intense, and there was little profit in business. In a country where it is necessary in some months of the year to give credit, and where in consequence credit is abused the year round, it is disastrous to sell goods at cost—to say nothing of selling at less than cost, as was often done.

In many parts of the country the condition of the retailer became almost intolerable. While his customers were prospering, insane cut-throat competition was compelling him to work for a mere pittance. With the development of the country, his customers no longer really required long credits, but as it had always been the custom to run store bills they still did so, using their ready money to indulge in land speculations.

The Association Idea.

In Boissevain, Man., conditions became intolerable, and in the Summer of 1904 the dealers in that town sent out an invitation to merchants in neighboring towns to meet them and consider the advisability of forming an association to protect the interests of its members. The invitation met with some response, and the expressions of sympathy were so numerous that it was decided at the Boissevain meeting to call a general meeting of Manitoba merchants in Winnipeg during the Bonspiel week the following February. In the meantime T. J. Lawlor, of Killarney, was appointed provisional president, and A. T. Embree, of Boissevain, consented to act as provisional secretary.

First Winnipeg Meeting.

Accordingly Manitoba merchants were invited by circular and through the columns of the trade press to meet in Winnipeg during the Bonspiel. The response was encouraging for the attendance was large, and more than one hundred dealers who could not attend wrote the secretary expressing their hearty approval of the association idea. It was decided, therefore, to form a permanent organization, and a committee was appointed to frame a constitution. Expressions of sympathy had been received from merchants beyond the boundaries of the Province of Manitoba, and, being men of large ideas, the constitution committee recommended that the association be known as the Retail Merchants' Association of Western Canada, and that its field be the Greater Canada from the Great Lakes to the Pacific Ocean. This recomendation was adopted.

H. C. Hamelin,
First Vice-President of the Retail Merchants' Association of Western Canada.

Wholesale Support.

The convention lasted three days, and meetings were held morning, afternoon and night. The evils which the association was intended to remedy were thoroughly discussed, and definite remedies were suggested after due consideration. A pleasing feature was the hearty support given the association by the wholesale grocery trade of Winnipeg. One of the sessions of the convention was held in the warehouse of Foley, Lock & Larson—the hall not being available that evening—and other wholesale houses were enthusiastic in their expressions of sympathy and promises of support.

Credit Evil.

Chief among the topics discussed was the evil of long credits. It was felt that the credit system could be dealt with effectively only by united action, and the problem was to hit upon a plan which would meet with the approval of all concerned. One or two dealers wanted to do away with the credit system entirely and were anxious that the association should pledge its members to inaugurate a strictly cash system. But the great majority were opposed to

J. D. Baine,

this plan, as they believed it to be too radical to meet with success. It was the general opinion that the credit system could not be abolished in the west, but that it might be controlled, and that if the western merchants could not master the credit system it would very soon master them. Accordingly a compromise between the cash and credit systems found favor with the great majority. Credit is most required by the western farmer during the Summer months and in the Fall before his wheat crop is threshed and marketed; in the Winter he is prosperous, and well able not only to pay his bills but to pay cash for his new purchases.

Such had been the hold of the pernicious credit system that many prosperous farmers were in the habit of paying their store bills only once a year, and commencing a new account as soon as the old was paid. It was accordingly decided by the association to recommend the closing of all accounts on November 1st of each year, and the maintenance of a strictly cash system until May 1st, the only exception to the rule to be that thirty days' accounts are to be treated as cash. At the July meeting this recommendation was amended to shorten the cash period one month. It was decided to refuse all credit from November 1st to April 1st. It was clearly understood at both general meetings that while the association strongly recommended this plan of dealing with the credit evil, no positive rule was laid down. However, it has been found in practice that the long credit evil is the question in which western retailers are most keenly interested, and in many cases it is only because the association offers a remedy for this evil that dealers are willing to join. In practice it has been found impossible to organize local sections of the association until all the merchants in the section signify their approval of the plan. Hence, to all intents and purposes, the credit proposals constitute a binding rule for all members.

Produce Question.

Another question that occupied the attention of the February gathering was the difficulty of handling farm produce to advantage. Intimately bound up with this question was the price cutting evil. It was well known that not only were many merchants selling many lines of staple groceries at cost, or less than cost, but they were accepting in payment butter and eggs at prices higher than could be obtained from the Winnipeg produce houses. Clearly this was a mischievous and ruinous practice, and the association set itself the task of grappling with it. It was decided that the most effective way would be to organize neighboring towns in sections in which uniform prices would be paid for produce and uniform prices charged for certain staples. During the Summer months this plan was adopted throughout the greater part of Manitoba, and it was attended with conspicuous success. Perhaps there had been more cutting on tobacco and sugar than on any other staples, and the association has saved much money for its members on these two items alone.

"Supply" Accounts.

Another grievance of a peculiarly delicate nature was discussed at the February meeting, and this was the existence of what are usually designated as "supply accounts." There can be no doubt that in many parts of Manitoba the grocery and general store trade is very much overdone. Many towns have more stores than they can well support. It is charged that in some towns stores are kept going by wholesale houses who want accounts in those towns and are unable to sell to any other stores. The association hope to influence the wholesale houses to cut off such "supply" accounts.

Organizer Appointed.

When the officers were elected in Februarv, A. T. Embree, of Boissevain, retained the office of secretary until such time as the association might appoint a permanent secretary who would also act as organizer. Late in April the executive met at the Leland Hotel in Winnipeg to consider the applications received for the position of organizer in response to newspaper advertising. Some twenty applications were received, and after due consideration W. A. Coulson, a bright young newspaperman, who had recently arrived in Winnipeg, was given the appointment. Mr. Coulson set to work at once with energy deserving of success, and after circularizing the entire western trade he commenced the difficult work of organizing the country dealers in local sections. His success in securing new members was remarkable, and he was able to present to the general meeting in July a highly encouraging membership list, published in The Canadian Grocer at the time.

W. A. Coulson,
Secretary and Organizer of the Retail Merchants' Association of Western Canada.

July Meeting.

The semi-annual meeting held in Winnipeg in July was the occasion for taking stock of the work already accomplished, and the substantial results shown by Secretary Coulson at the close of a few weeks' canvass encouraged the executive to push the enterprise with renewed energy. It was also made abundantly plain at the July meeting that the association has the hearty support of the Winnipeg wholesale trade. At the concluding session of the convention a large number of Winnipeg wholesale men were present, and their addresses were very encouraging to the gathering. Of the wholesale grocers, Wm. Georgeson, of Codville & Co., and A. S. Lock, of Foley, Lock & Larson, were particularly emphatic in their expressions of approval and promise of reasonable support. It was made quite plain that any dealer joining the association and later becoming weary in well doing and disposed to fall by the wayside, would lose favor with his wholesale house. The jobbers were determined to collect their accounts before the end of the year, and they supported the association because of its policy respecting the credit evil. In this matter, the interests of wholesaler and retailer are identical.

Trade Newspaper Organ Chosen.

It was felt by the executive that the

G. C. Sayles,

association required publicity in a trade newspaper which would be read only by members of the grocery and general store trade. The association is neither planning nor carrying out any work of which it has any reason to be ashamed, but while its aims are perfectly legitimate the association does not wish its affairs dissussed by the customers of its members.

The executive set themselves to select a paper which circulates only among grocers and general storekeepers, and as a result The Canadian Grocer was chosen as the official medium for all confidential news. Since that choice was made the western trade have read with interest many news items relating to the association and published exclusively in The Canadian Grocer.

"I have to thank The Canadian Grocer for much effective publicity," says Secretary Coulson. "It would be difficult to overestimate the assistance it has been to me in promoting the organization. Everywhere I go I find the dealers are acquainted with the working of the association from the reports in The Canadian Grocer, and I don't have to start at the beginning to tell them about it."

Work Since July.

Since the semi-annual meeting in July the association has made steady, substantial progress. A large addition has been made to the membership list, and a great many local sections have been organized. Each section has its own secretary, and the members meet from time to time to arrange the prices to be paid for produce and the prices to be charged for certain staple lines. The action of these local sections is reported to Secretary Coulson, whose duty it is to prevent friction through a clash in prices in neighboring sections.

Through the good work of the association cutting in tobacco and staples has been stopped in almost all sections in Manitoba, and in some towns in Saskatchewan. Uniform prices are paid in the various local sections for farm produce, and the dealers are no longer paying more than the market value for butter and eggs. On Wednesday of next week, November 1st, the association inaugurate their policy respecting credit. On that day all accounts are closed and credit will be refused until April 1st, 1906. In this difficult work the association has the best wishes and hearty support of The Canadian Grocer.

THE LAND OF PROMISE.

CANADA, and especially the Northwest Territories, is receiving at the present time the marked attention of the British Isles. It is beginning to be realized that the opportunities in this fair and vast Dominion are unlimited.

A few years ago general remarks might have been found in the various newspapers of Great Britain, with an occasional editorial on some passing circumstance or condition of interest. Now, however, this has changed, and all eyes are turned to "Canada" as the most attractive, practicable, and profitable avenue towards which to turn the vast amount of ability and energy which to a large extent is without prospect in the Motherland.

The development of this fast and opulent region is but in its infancy. Its progress, however, is being tenaciously pushed forward with a remarkable degree of energy, intelligence and boundless self-confidence by all Canadian citizens.

It is not saying too much when we remark that in all probability the region between Winnipeg and the Rockies will ere long be inhabited by many millions of prosperous, energetic and thoroughly contented people, the satisfactory feature being that Anglo-Saxon blood will predominate.

Conditions each year are improving with great rapidity so that the many trials and hardships which have had to be faced by the pioneers of earlier days will to a large extent become a thing of the past. The influx, therefore, which will gradually continue, will meet surroundings at once congenial and satisfactory, producing in a settler that immediate adaptability to environment which is so necessary in the case of emigrants.

Within a generation or so the part the Northwest Territories will be called upon to pay in the history of the Empire and of the world must be by no means a small or unimportant one.

W. Ledoux,
Member Executive of the Retail Merchants' Association of Western Canada.

MAN WHO WORKS AND GIVES

There is a hope for the man on the long, steep hill,
Who is toiling to find success;
There is a hope for the man who uses his will
In the struggle and strife and stress.
There is a hope for the man who will banish luck,
And bend to a wiser plan,
If, shoulder to shoulder, he stands with pluck,
And gives to his fellowman.

Deep in the whirling, eddying stream
Of striving humanity lies
The smold'ring flames that will glow and gleam
Like the light from famished eyes,
When fanned by desire, ambition and pluck,
And the words, "I will, I can";
Let these be your tools for success—not luck—
And give to your fellowman!

THE GROCERS' REFLECTIONS

A GROCER'S THANKSGIVING.

EVERYBODY gave thanks last Thursday, at least it is to be hoped they did. Even the hard-worked grocer shut up his shop — of course after filling just a few pressing orders—and in company with his wife and family sought the house of the Lord and with a full and thankful heart and lusty lung joined in the grand, old, soul-stirring, rock-moving hymn,

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow,

He left the church a better man, and the poor old organ-grinder at the corner of his street pricked up her ears at the jingle of the quarter that dropped into her battered tin cup, and her eyes glistened with a tear of thankfulness, and her lips spoke the words of her heart with a feeling that made the grocer's lips tremble in an unaccountable, and to him very embarrassing way, while a lump formed in his throat that threatened to impede his breathing. Yes, he felt a better man, and if ever a quarter was given that carried with it the blessing of Him that said "It is more blessed to give than receive," it was that quarter of the grocer.

And when he arrived home, and the family had all gathered round his groaning dinner table, and he saw that all the olive branches were clustered round the parental trunks, his heart was full and the grace dropped from his trembling lips in a manner to endanger the stability of the napkin tucked under his chin. Even the delivery boy whose home is up in the "North Countrie" was not forgotten, and never "eat such a dinner in his life," as he told the butcher's boy on Friday morning when comparing notes as to how much more they could individually have taken without "bustin'." Yes, it was a dinner ; would there were more like them, more Thanksgivings in the year.

And as he sat nibbling at his cheese and celery and sipping his own extra blend of Old Government and Mocha, and his youngest branch, aetat three-fifty—beg pardon, three and a half years —was taking up an entrenched position on his left knee, much to the dissatisfaction of Towser, the terrier, a practical side of his Thanksgiving dinner seemed to suggest itself to him, and smiling somewhat at the oddity of the thought, he drew the attention of his circle to him by remarking : "Say, mother, have you ever thought when eating your dinner on this day of all grateful days, of the practical side of the meal, that is where all the good things come from, how they're grown, prepared and marketed ? No ? Well, if you will not mind and can exercise a reasonable restraint over Miss Restless here I will take the articles by courses, and hope to show you all how true the saying is, that the world is but a very small body after all, and that steam and electricity have practically abolished distance, and how, like Monte Cristo, we can say, 'The world is ours.'

"The soup—ah, the succulent bivalve dug out of his cosy bed in the Chesapeake or the island-bound waters of Long Island Sound, his dark and rugged shells the caskets where Neptune and the water sprites drop their precious pearls, what would we do without him now at feast or festival ? And with the soup let us not forget the celery that Uncle Eb sent down from his farm in Bruce ; the long white stems with their feathery tufts of green are pleasant sentinels on the outposts of a well-planned dinner.

"Then the fish. Here we are quite at home, and the waters of this great land of ours are shining with silver sprays of such beauty and variety as would throw the most polished epicure of 'La Belle Paris' into ecstacies of delight. Our Niagara whitefish of to-day has heard the roar of the mighty cataract and trembled with awe at the majesty of the great leviathan whose roar has sounded through untold ages and proclaimed itself the great work of an immortal Creator. You know that if among other natural products of our land and waters we are proud of one thing more than another, it is our fish, and even our southern friends want them, and want them badly, too. Our salmon, rich and pink, inimitable by artist's brush, from the land of the crafty Chinook, stands foremost on the bills of fare of all civilized peoples. Our mackerel and our cod hug our eastern shores with a patriotism worthy of imitation by the pitiable disciples of blue-ruinism.

"Yes, I know you want to hear about the turkey. There's nothing much to say about the red-nosed king of the barnyard. His gobble-gobble is heard throughout the length and breadth of this peaceful, blessed land of ours. Still, in my mind, I think he improves with dressing, and looks more interesting on a dinner table with his drumsticks pointing heavenward at an angle of 65 degrees, and the deep red berry from the banks of Cape Cod in tempting dishes by his side. Ah, yes, we're all agreed that the dinner would be incomplete without his presence, and though the poet sings,

'Of all the birds what flies,
There's none that's half so nice
As goose, stuffed with sage and inyuns,' we'll all adhere to our banner and fight the battle of our king.

"Let us not forget our vegetables. The mashed potatoes need no further mention, and the sweet wrinkled peas and cauliflower are both indigenous to our climate, and as familiar as a commercial traveler on his maiden trip.

"But I am spinning out much longer than I thought to, when starting out to tell you of my practical reflections, and as I see Miss Restless here is casting longing glances at her carriage and doll, I'll briefly refer to the rest of our pleasant meal, but I warn you to fasten on the wings of my fancy very securely, as I intend to annihilate space and time in taking you to scenes and lands where what we eat and drink is at home.

"Come, then, briefly. Our apple pie, with its brown overcoat and sugar-sprinkled top first calls our attention, and as a home bird needs no further comment.

"Off then to France and the peasant homes of Rocquefort, and a nibble at the blue-dotted cheese so creamy. Away again to the sunny groves of sunny Italy and the vegas and dehesas of Malaga, with the sound of mandolin and castanet ringing in our ears, and visions of gauzy mantillas and black-eyed senoritas floating before our eyes, and let us pluck a few olives and bear off the long oval green grape. Once more we spread our wings and stop not until our feet touch upon the Holy Land, and we rest ourselves beneath the fig trees of Palestine and wonder how such rich and luscious fruit could grow in soil so rocky and so barren. A few figs and then away to sandy Arabia, and grasping a handful of the golden berry of the east, we float south and eastward with the sound of the Moslem's 'Allah-il-Allah' following in our wake like the echo of a fatal nightmare ; away across the Indian Ocean on the wings of a helping trade wind to sea-girt Java and here on the coffee hills of Mynheer Van Stane beneath the shadows of Mount Salak we'll rest a moment.

"Yes, mother, half way round the globe and still we have not visited all the homes of what we have been privileged to set before us. Rested? Yes. Well, let us change our course a bit and strike north and east towards the Celestial Kingdom and wander through the well kept tea gardens of Tseng-Tsing and picking a bud or two here and a leaf or two there, we'll take our aromatic blend and passing over the pagodas of the Mikado, we're off across the peaceful main to our own Vancouver, and then crossing the Rocky spine of our northern sphere, we'll pick up

'The golden grain from out whose shell is pres't
The manna that to men has aye been blest.'

"And now home again, and here we are cosily sitting round our cheerful board, no one the worse for the long and rapid journey, and everybody I hope with a better knowledge of what seems to us without reflection a matter of course, and all, I hope, truly thankful on this day of grateful remembrances for past favors. Before we leave the table I might add with the poet, that

'Serenely full, the epicure would say,
Fate cannot harm us, we have dined to-day.' "

THE REASON WHY.

An experienced detective officer was praising the various cash-registering devices that have come of late years into world-wide use.

"These machines," he said, "have undoubtedly diminished crime. They have saved many weak persons from a daily and hourly temptation hard to withstand. They have also saved employers a great deal of money, for they have driven the dishonest out of a field of work wherein they loved to labor in the past.

"I heard of an assistant in a grocery the other day who was getting $8 a week. He had to be on duty at 7 in the morning, and he was not through till 7, and sometimes 8, at night. The poor fellow had no time for anything but work and sleep.

"He found time, though, to get married, and the week after the ceremony he asked his employer for a rise.

" 'Why, Horace,' the employer said, 'you are getting $8 a week. What ails you? When I was your age I kept a wife and two children on $8 a week, and saved money besides.'

" 'They didn't have cash registers in those days,' said Horace bitterly.

A SLIGHT ERROR.

"We had lived in a certain American city ten years," confided a prosperous merchant to his partner, "when, after many futile attempts, we at last succeeded in persuading my mother, who lived on a remote country farm, to visit us.

"One afternoon my mother suggested that we give a party for the children. My wife cheerfully assented, but found that she did not have enough dishes of the kind which she would risk with boisterous children. Being of an economical disposition, she ordered a dozen boxes of a certain brand of breakfast food, each box containing as a prize a cup and saucer.

"On the day of the party my wife was called away from home. She instructed mother and informed her that the dishes would be delivered by the groceryman before dinner.

"That evening mother informed us that the children had had a glorious time. 'And how careful your groceryman is,' she continued. 'Why, each one of those cups and saucers was done up in a separate box, and I almost smothered the fire in the furnace with the stuff they were imbedded in.' "

MORAL—ADVERTISE.

Many years ago, report has it, thirty of the girls who sealed and labeled the cans in a canning factory in the American west got so warmed up drinking fermented juice that they took off all their superfluous clothes, sealed them in and labeled them. They got mixed with several thousand cans of preserves and for months thereafter it was nothing uncommon when you had company to open a raspberry preserve label and turn out a pink hair ribbon and a pair of stockings and many an old apron or a corset cover. Only a short time ago the landlady of a hotel was absent-mindedly looking out of a window while dumping a can of supposed peaches, when out rolled two hip pads. She didn't notice it and a near-sighted boarder ate one for a waffle. The can was bought of a merchant who didn't advertise, and it had been on his shelves for over twenty years.

INNOCENCE.

Mr. Sharp, the provision dealer—who, by the way, is regarded as a smart business man—looked distinctly annoyed. Glaring savagely across at Henry, the new clerk, he said, sternly—

"Come here, sir!"

Henry came.

"That lady who just went out—didn't I hear her ask for fresh-laid eggs?"

"Yes, sir," Henry answered.

"And you said we hadn't any?"

"Y—yes, sir; that is quite true."

"True, you lunkhead, you—didn't you see me lay those eggs myself on the counter ten minutes ago? You untruthful scoundrel! Take a month's notice to quit, and mind you don't look to me for a reference. We must have no prevarication in this establishment."

A NEW SPECIES.

The grocer dusted a cocoanut and laid it in his window in such a way that a black bruise did not show.

"This cocoanut reminds me," he said, "of a big yellow haired girl named Gretel. Gretel was a Swede, fresh from the Old Country. She worked in old Miss Greene's kitchen, and she came here to do her mistress' marketing.

"One day I had a window display of cocoanuts, and Gretel stood outside and studied them a long time, for she had never seen a cocoanut before. Finally she entered the shop.

" 'Please,' she said, 'how much is them big mountain potatoes, with whiskers on them, in the window?' "

FIGGER UP.

If the day seems to carry a burden of woe,
Figger up;
If its moments seem dragging and terribly slow,
Figger up;
For I guess you will find, if you pause to reflect,
That there's 'bout as much sun as you've right to expect;
If you've earned something good, you are bound to collect—
Figger up.

On the great slate of Time there are many accounts—
Figger up—
For various payments of divers amounts—
Figger up,
And we're apt to collect what is coming our way,
Though it's shine of the sun or gloom of the day;
If we dance, you have heard, we the fiddler must pay—
Figger up.

Look back on your life, though you'd much rather not—
Figger up—
And say, if you dare, that the treatment you got—
Figger up—
Is not pretty near to the treatment you earned,
Who was it the candle incessantly burned,
And burned at both ends, until wisdom he learned?
Figger up.

What's the use of a sigh, or the good of a whine—
Figger up—
Take your medicine now, as I must take mine,
Figger up.
And I guess we may find on the big final sheet
There was just as much shine as of gloom for our feet,
Or, if not, that the treatment we had was but meet—
Figger up.

GOOD ADVERTISING

Holding Trade.

WHEN some grocers feel the first touches of opposition from "bigger" houses, out of town, a lurking desire comes over them, first to sell out, second to show fight. Opposition is the spur of business, and when legitimate and reasonable in potency, should not be feared. Rather it should be welcomed as the incentive to self-examination — pointing the hand of inquiry inside the store and then outside. If farmers drive by your place, or pedestrians walk by, have an eye to your goods. If such continues, have an eye to your policy. Your chief opposition, perhaps, has a nice announcement each Saturday in the local paper, in which he quotes prices that catch trade and retain custom. He perhaps prints a list of "specials" once a week, and distributes them among patrons, prospective and regular. He may also make a feature of giving quick service to those customers who have to drive lengthy distances. Take a peep into this merchant's store. Note his arrangement. If you see no improvement over your own, then know that some other factor—the newspaper—is his talisman of trade. Advertise with an individuality. Let farmers feel that you offer special inducements "just for them." Let townsfolk get to know you for, say, reliable Friday night announcements in the papers. Enlist the systematic help and enthusiasm of your employes by graciousness and appreciation on your part — then work and wait.

Clerks Should Study Advertisements.

Clerks should study the advertisements their employers write and thus keep a grip on newspaper publicity as well as store publicity. This would tend to produce a keener insight into the conditions governing seasonable advertising and prove profitable in the way of "supply and demand" experience. Too often clerks unknowingly misplace their zeal. While one line of goods is being advertised in the papers, they perhaps talk up something else in the store. In other words, they do not work hand in hand with their employer, though they work faithfully. Where a clerk prepares his employer's advertisements he might have conferences with the other clerks and acquaint them with the points he himself has been acquainted with through seeing and knowing "what the manager wants." Co-operation is the half-brother to success. It should be every clerk's lodestar.

Store Individuality.

There is no limit to what can be accomplished in the way of store individuality. I remember reading of an American merchant who adopted the idea of giving clean money for change. His plan was to express to a nearby bank all his old coin and bills in exchange for which he received the new. This fact was advertised in the papers. In time his place became known as "the clean money store." The merchant admitted, of course, that his desire to be original cost him something in labor, but it paid him. While this and kindred schemes are not always practicable, they show, nevertheless, that the seemingly impossible becomes possible in the hands of an up-to-date, wideawake merchant who believes in advertising his business, and, what is more, does it.

Special Sales.

Opportunities for special sales are not always taken advantage of. Far too many grocers allow business bogeys and the attitude of other merchants on the question to govern them. True, as compared with, say, the dry goods business, where cloth is always cloth, and the dictates of seasons unmistakable, there is not the field for price campaigns in the grocery business on account of the perishability attached to commodities and their continued subjection to slumps and rises. The special sale plan in the case of dry goods is ordinarily to put on the table, at a marked-down price, goods which the merchant knows are not selling fast, and which as time goes along will sell slower. The clearance makes room for seasonable stock. Such like procedure is impossible with grocers because the bulk of their business is of the same nature the year round. Hence, few special sales. But a grocer can frame a policy of his own with the assistance of the very conditions which seem to frustrate his activities along this line.

For instance, in the Fall there is quite a demand for preserving peaches and the majority of stores are well stocked. Prices range nearly even. Trade is divided up. In the end each grocer loses a few baskets on "spoils" and "fill-ups." Now, suppose one of the grocers, instead of waiting for the people to come to him, went after them by announcing through the papers and in his window and store a special peach sale and cut the price one cent per basket on opposition stores. These stores would undoubtedly laugh at such a move when the fruit could be sold at proper margin in due time. But by having a special sale and hinting at low prices the chances are the enterprising grocer would clear out his stock in one-half the time and have a better turn-over than the other grocers besides. The people who read the advertisements and saw the store cards would in all probability buy other fruit. The special sale might be the means of securing a few orders on branded goods, too.

Design Your Ads.

When grocers write copy for the press they usually do it in a hurry, which is unfortunate because the advertisement suffers. The office that sets the matter is also usually in a hurry. Consequently the main points in the advertisement are perhaps not duly emphasized and minor details perhaps displayed prominently. If you cannot apportion a particular time each week for writing newspaper copy, then the next best thing is to write plainly on good paper, and, as regards arrangement, to write the matter as it is to appear when set. Printers can usually dress up in type what is raw on paper—that is, if the advertisement is not too large and time limited. But don't bank too much on this assistance. It is entirely voluntary. Knowing your own goods best, and what you want to say about them, it should be easy enough to underline words here and there with one stroke, two strokes, etc., according to their importance, also to write the salient words in positions by themselves. The "letter" style advertisements are too common in the printing office. That is why some announcements in dailies give one the impression that the compositor got excited over a bad piece of copy and had no time to redress the errors he made in essaying to be tasty.

To sell goods is the first mission of an advertisement, to display ornaments the second, but there is no reason why the second, in moderation, should interfere with the first. It should rather aid, by attracting that requisite—attention.

ADVERTISING CRITICISMS

Faulty Advertisements.

A FEW more grocers advertise in the Fall than in the Summer months, but the number in both cases is made up almost entirely of town stores. This arises, no doubt, from the fact that grocers in the large cities believe their field is local and, therefore, little is to be gained by newspaper advertising.

Scanning Canadian papers the first grocery advertisement that I pitched upon was that of W. E. Pautler, one of those chosen for reproduction. Mr. Pautler has the advertising belief all right, but unfortunately he does not employ his space judiciously.

PICKLING SEASON

Preserved Ginger, Whole Pickling Spice, Ground Pickling Spice, Whole Cloves, Ground Cloves, Whole Cinnamon, Ground Cinnamon, Root Ginger, Black and White Pepper, Cayenne Pepper, Cayenne Pods, Allspice, Turmeric, Celery Seed, Mustard Seed, Currie Powder, Nutmegs, Vinegars.

W. E. PAUTLER

STAR GROCER, PHONE 42, PRESTON

The advertisement on pickling season is itself apropos, but why the needless enumeration? A few of the incidentals related to pickling might properly have been specified, but space is turned to no account in making such statements as "Whole pickling spice," "Ground pickling spice," when "pickling spices" would have been sufficient. The same thing occurs concerning cinnamon, pepper, etc.

One half of Mr. Pautler's advertisement might have contained some references to fruits, jars, etc., or might even have announced some special prices on other lines of goods. That could have been accomplished by omitting the present superfluous wording. An advertisement should state facts clearly, but it should never become an a, b, c lesson.

The setting of this announcement, too, could have been improved by "single leading" the details and using the space thus saved to "open up" the name and address.

F. Corey advertises in a general way. He has nothing special to announce. It strikes me that a retailer's tea trade does not warrant an advertisement on it solely as virtually happens in this case. No single line of goods warrants such, in fact, unless as pointed out before, there is a price importance to it.

If Mr. Corey had quantities of bulk tea to dispose of at a certain figure that would have been different to merely reminding his customers about the guarantee on 25c. and 40c. tea. He might have done the "reminding," and, in the same space, have quoted some figures on goods likely to be in demand. There is a useless "white" between the heading and body matter, and the address, etc., is unduly spread. Dividing "Murray" is bad.

Cash Bargain Grocery is, in substance, the most businesslike advertisement of the trio, though it, too, is unnecessarily scrambled, with a consequent sacrifice of space. Two of the display lines, at least, are disproportionately large, so that the advertisement has no balance. In short it is typographically ugly.

In quoting prices, and thus giving the announcement a "particular" savor, "Cash Bargain Grocery" surpasses

The three advertisements reproduced demonstrate that the spirit of opportune publicity is spreading among retailers, but there is room for improvement yet in the matter of methods. UP-TO-DATE BOOKKEEPING

THE "LOOSE LEAF."

By J. R. M.

"System is the fulcrum on which business is moved successfully."

IN systemizing your business you have in mind one of two objects, either the cutting down of expenses by reducing the number of your employes, or introducing such new ideas as will give you more detail, enable you to know just how each department of your business is doing—and thus place it on a profit paying basis.

That this could not be accomplished by the old and antiquated methods in common use up to within the last 25 years was apparent to every man seeking to improve his business, and forge ahead into the front rank of commercial giants, with the result that brains and brawn have been developed to meet this demand, bringing into existence a system of units or "loose leaves." This principle permits of adaptibility to meet to best advantage the changing conditions of business; giving the greatest amount of information in condensed form, in the least time and the most accurate manner.

For these reasons "Loose Leaf" methods are no longer an innovation, but are considered a necessary part of modern business and are fast displacing the cumbersome methods of the past.

There are several reasons for this:

1. The expansion of the loose leaf system is unlimited.

2. Unlimited classification is obtained.

3. The chances for mistakes are greatly reduced.

4. The work can be divided among several clerks so as to accomplish it within a specified time.

5. It permits the removal of all dead and useless matter.

These various points can be readily seen by studying in detail the "Loose Leaf" ledger.

All bookkeepers and accountants know that with any style of bound book certain accounts are bound to require more space than originally allotted to them when opening the book; rendering transfers from one part of the ledger to another absolutely necessary. The "Loose Leaf" Ledger with its unlimited expansion removes the necessity of re-opening accounts.

The use of one sheet for one account with the opportunity of adding as many sheets as may be found necessary for the continuance of the account without interfering with the other accounts is a desirable feature only obtained by a "Loose Leaf" System.

The one account always retains the same place in the Ledger year after year; sheets as they become filled are balanced and removed to the Transfer Binder where they occupy the same relative position in which they appeared in the Current Binder.

Unlimited classification can be obtained by various methods of indexing. Accounts may be arranged alphabetically, sub-dividing A-Z index into as many divisions as required for the convenience of handling the accounts, taking into consideration the number of Ledgers in use; some business houses derive greater benefit by indexing their Ledgers by Routes, Territories, Towns, Salesmen, numerically, or any other plan suited to the particular needs of the business.

By this elastic method a vast amount of time is saved in the posting; the charge sheets and cash items can be arranged previous to posting in the same order as the indexing of Ledgers, thus rendering posting very rapid and removing practically all possibility of error.

Another great advantage is the reduction in the size of the ledger. It is not necessary to provide a large sheet for a long account as ample space is provided by the addition of extra leaves and by continually weeding out the closed or discontinued accounts, the size and weight of the book is reduced to a minimum.

The security of the system is obtained by a careful examination of the locking devices, the principal features of which are fully explained by the various inventors and manufacturers.

The fact that the most conservative banks, insurance companies, and mercantile houses are adopting "Loose Leaf" Books is conclusive evidence that the principle is perfectly safe.

No merchant or manufacturer doing business to any great volume can afford to be without "Loose Leaf" Systems.

Those who do not have it do not know what they are missing and those who have it regret they did not have it long before.

It is an absolute necessity and of invaluable assistance in business of moderate volume.

A SYSTEM FOR RETAILERS.

GOOD bookkeeping consists in simply correctly copying, adding and subtracting of figures so placed that any mature person can understand what they mean.

There should be nothing complicated about it, everything should be plain and simple.

The average merchant has ordinary common sense and will readily accept any plan that will assist him in simplifying his business and reduce the amount of work necessary to keep his accounts in a clear and simple manner.

Two of the greatest difficulties experienced by retail merchants is the getting out promptly of his customers' accounts at the end of each week or month, and the time and work required to know at any particular time just how any individual customer's account stands if it should be asked for.

These difficulties can be overcome by installing what is commonly known as the Loose Leaf Monthly Account System.

The Counter Check Book is used when taking an order, a copy of which is sent with the goods, the duplicate is kept and the amounts posted to the Monthly Account which consists of a Loose Leaf Binder, indexed throughout from A-Z, containing account sheets in duplicate, ruled like Form No. 1, duplicate sheet having no ruling or printing.

Your customers' accounts are arranged in the book according to the first letter of their name thus enabling you to find any desired account at once. After taking the order in your Counter Check Book, the goods are got together, and whatever corrections found necessary are made to the order. The original copy of order is sent with the goods to the customer and the duplicate kept for posting. At the close of the day or at any time that is convenient, the orders are checked off and the amounts posted to their respective accounts in duplicate in the Monthly Account Binder, all cash payments are credited directly to this account and at the end of the week or month accordingly as the accounts are rendered; or if the customer should come in between the regular times of rendering accounts and ask for it, it can be totaled at once and rendered. After the accounts have been rendered the duplicate sheet containing exact copy of account is removed from the Binder and filed on the Day Book Binder from which the total is posted to the Ledger Account in one item.

By keeping your accounts in this manner it saves the work, at the time of making invoice, of picking out from page after page of charges the various items for each account; this is done daily direct to the account. It also saves the posting to the Ledger Account, each individual sale, which in many cases means 25 or 30 per month; as the total amount of account is posted from the duplicate sheet which becomes your Day Book in one item; thus producing a further saving of time and space and prolonging the life of your Ledger 75 to 100 per cent.

When your customers receive their bills promptly, or can obtain them within a few minutes of the time of asking, it shows them that you are prompt; and they recognize the fact that your system is good and that you are conducting business on an up-to-date principle. The opinion of your customers is a big factor in the life of any business and any method that will save you time and labor and at the same time satisfy your customers will be a revenue producing acquisition.

SYSTEMS FOR WHOLESALERS.

IT is impossible to lay out any definite plan for a wholesale grocery house, until the details of the business have been studied and modern ideas fitted to suit the particular requirements of the establishment.

Every business has certain details particular to itself, which must be taken care of, but a general plan can be outlined that with a little manipulation can be arranged to suit the majority of houses requiring an up-to-date labor-saving and time-saving system.

In this article we will deal with the sales department, showing a system for handling orders, invoicing and shipping which is no longer a theory or an experiment. On the face of it, it may appear somewhat complicated, in reality it is simplicity itself.

The travellers are provided with triplicate order books, one copy being left with the customer, one remaining in the traveler's book and the original being forwarded to the house.

On receipt of either a traveler's order, letter order from a customer, or of an order by telephone, or wire, it is entered in the order register and given the first blank number. (All orders except traveler's are previously entered on similar forms to traveler's order.) The order clerk then makes out departmental shipping orders and sends the main orders to the shipping clerk.

The departmental shipping orders which bear the same number as the main order from which they were drawn, are sent to the various heads in each department.

The goods are laid out for shipment and in case of small goods are sent to the shipping room. As regards heavy goods, the weight and quantities are filled in, a check mark put in the column opposite each line that is ready for shipment and the departmental orders sent to the shippers.

As soon as the various goods are shipped the shipper puts a plain cross mark on the check mark, which now shows that the different lines are actually in the carrier's hands.

Before shipping the departmental orders are compared with the main orders of the same number.

They are then all handed to the invoice clerk. The main orders are filed away and the day book entry made from the departmental orders.

These orders having been priced and extended, the invoice is made out and customers billed by means of a Loose Leaf Invoice System.

By this system the invoice and day book are written at the same time, by means of carbon paper, either by pen, pencil or typewriter.

The invoice is then detached, leaving the duplicate, which becomes a page in your day book, ready to file upon a binder, for which it is already punched. These invoice forms are made in various lengths, the most useful sizes ranging from 14 inches to 17 inches long, this gives you a long invoice if desired and enables you to have various sized invoices having one, two, three or four invoices to a page. This system also enables the ledger keeper to keep his books posted right up to date. The invoice clerk using only the pages of the day book containing that day's entries, there is no delay when other employes want the day book.

The cost column having been filled in on the departmental orders, they are also filed away on the binder.

The amounts on each order or of each entry in the day book are not added, but at the end of the month they are tabulated on total sheets.

The total sheets for the day book will show the total amount charged to customers during that month, divided into city or country amounts if necessary.

The total sheets of the order binder will show the same grand total, but this sum will be divided among, and show amount of the sales of the various departments.

This is a check not only on the additions of the day book, but will also go far to prevent the chance of any shipment being made and not duly billed to the customer.

The total sheets of the order binder also show the cost of each sale in each department. The information from these two books, taken in conjunction with expense accounts of each department enables the management from month to month to make accurate comparisons not only of the expense, sales and profits of each department, but also compare the percentage that such expenses, sales and profits bear to one another as well as to those of other departments.

Credits to customers are made only upon the authority of a credit for returns signed by the proper authority. These forms are treated by the invoice clerk in the same manner on the department orders and filed on a binder called "Credit Binder." This book is on exactly the same principle as the day book already described.

The ledgers should be loose leaf ledgers and arranged as follows: Accounts collectable, accounts payable, general ledger.

A full description of details is not given, but by means of the Loose Leaf System information may be increased, and added to, sub-divided and elaborated to almost any desired extent, bearing in mind always that System is the watchword of all office work and must be as concise as possible.

SYSTEM IN A RETAIL STORE.

A GREAT deal of time is devoted in these days of advanced business methods to the application of systems to every class of industrial pursuit. Care should be exercised, however, to avoid the introduction of systems which are cumbersome and necessitate a large amount of detail work with practically no better result than could be obtained by the adoption of a simple yet productive method.

It is a question whether the business done by a retail store would warrant the expenditure of time and money necessary to maintain an elaborate system, but the following ideas may suggest some methods which might be adopted to advantage.

Stock.

Cards, alphabetically arranged according to the various lines carried in stock, may be used to keep an up-to-date record of the stock on hand. (Fig. 1.)

This card may be used also for a cash record of all invoices by the addition of other columns for further particulars, such as "List Price," "Net Price," "Advance on Cost," etc. It may seem at first sight that this record would entail a large amount of work, but if the posting is done daily from the sales record, the information which the cards contain will more than offset a few minutes extra work in keeping the cards up-to-date, and besides, the actual stock on hand and cost and selling prices may be obtained at once from the cards instead of counting stock or looking up the purchase invoice, as the case may be.

Cheese.	Bought.			Sold.			In stock.	Invoice price.		Selling price.
Creamery Co.	Apr.	10	60	Apr.	15	10	50		05		07

Orders may be placed in time to restock goods which have run very low, thus avoiding the loss of sales necessitated by not having the goods in stock and a good assortment may be kept constantly on hand. Of course, if the merchant does most of the selling himself and can watch the stock carefully, and order accordingly, no such method would be necessary, but where several clerks are employed and the stock is being handled constantly, some systematic record of the stock should be kept.

Purchase Invoices.

A box file will be found a very convenient receptacle in which to keep the invoices for goods purchased until paid. When the goods are received and have been entered in a receiving book or checked off from the invoice, whichever method is employed, the different lines should be posted to the stock record cards, the invoice then being placed in the box file for payment. These invoices are filed alphabetically, according to the concern from which goods were purchased.

Paying Accounts.

To insure the saving of all cash discounts, if the retailer is in a position to take advantage of discounts allowed for short terms, the creditors should be notified to make drafts when the account becomes due. In this way the dealer is free from any anxiety in this regard.

The statements when received may be checked off from the invoices and then attached, forming a complete record of the settlement, the net amount being charged direct to the "Merchandise Account."

If it is convenient to protect drafts, or if the retailer prefers to pay by cheque, or by other means, and also wishes to take advantage of cash discounts, the statements may be arranged according to due date and settlements made accordingly, although the draft method will be found less cumbersome.

Sales Record.

The method in general use is the duplicate "cash" or "charge" books, a complete record being kept of all sales, whether cash or on credit. Several of the books may be in use at one time, but if the amounts of each sale are recorded carefully on the recapitulation sheet provided for this purpose at the end of the book, the total sales may be obtained.

A column should be provided for "cash sales" and "charge sales," the total of the "cash sales" column agreeing at the end of the day with the amount received by the cashier from the different salesmen. The original of the "cash sales" slip should be handed to the cashier with the cash. The "charge sales" slips are marked or stamped "charge" and the original sent along with the goods to the customer as an invoice, the duplicate remaining in the "sales book" to be charged to the customer direct. The sales slips are numbered, and in this way every slip may be accounted for, either through the original in the hands of the cashier or through the charge direct to the customer.

If the stock cards are kept, the posting of different lines sold may be made right from these sales slips each day, and the balance of stock on hand ascertained at any time without actually taking stock.

TEA—ITS GROWTH AND MANUFACTURE

CEYLON TEA DEVELOPMENT.

TEA is unquestionably the most important of Ceylon's many and diversified products. Time was, and that less than a generation ago, when coffee held the first place. To the thinking mind grave problems suggest themselves whenever any material changes in established customs, policies or institutions are contemplated. People the world over are more or less conservative, and therefore loth to adopt innovations in any direction; material changes are usually, in fact universally, the result of slow evolutionary growth. The people of Ceylon, however, were not consulted as regarded the substitution of tea in the place of coffee. A power greater than that with which man is endowed proposed and disposed of the whole question in a twinkling, with the result that the leading industry of a great, growing and extraordinarily prosperous community became a closed incident in its agricultural history.

Briefly the story of the failure was this: In 1869 there were in cultivation in Ceylon 176,000 acres of coffee which returned a profit of about 25 per cent. an acre on the invested capital. For the years 1868, 1869 and 1870 the aggregate export from these plantations exceeded 3,000,000 cwts., valued in European markets approximately at £12,000,000.

It was a period of great prosperity in Ceylon. Then an insidious disease appeared in the coffee lands, viz., a minute fungus. With the rapidity of a devastating element it spread in all directions. Every effort to destroy it failed. The pest confined its attention to the leaves, causing them to wither and fall off; year by year the output decreased until eventually coffee planting was ruined as an industry, and planters were constrained to desist from raising it.

Attention was turned to the cultivation of tea and from a total export of only 23 pounds in 1873 it had risen to 144,275,608 pounds in 1901. The area under cultivation at the present time is approximately 400,000 acres.

The tea bushes are planted in regular lines on estates varying in elevation from but little above sea level to upwards of 6,000 feet. At the lower elevations the teas are stronger, and the yield more abundant; on the higher hills the yield is less, but the teas are of a purer and more delicate flavor, and their greater value compensates for a smaller yield. The yield varies from about 350 to 700 pounds per acre, though sometimes in flat, alluvial lands it exceeds 1,000 pounds.

The rapid progress of the British-grown tea industry during the past thirty years cannot fail to be remarked by all who are in any way interested in the product. This is undoubtedly due in a large measure to the value and purity of the product itself, but the introduction of European supervision and the consequent invention and adoption of machinery which inevitably follow, have contributed not a little to the great success. In the old method almost every detail was done by hand manipulation, but under European supervision this is happily at an end and the whole process from first to last is carried out on strictly sanitary principles, the tea itself scarcely coming into touch with the hands from the time it is picked until the final packing into chests. Thus the extra cleanliness and vastly superior results obtained by scientific machinery, added to the natural advantages of the climate and soil of British tea districts, give the reason why British-grown teas have made such remarkable strides.

The tea plant of Ceylon, of which there are many varieties, is a kind of evergreen shrub. In its wild state it will often reach a height of about 20 feet, but under cultivation it is seldom allowed to reach a greater height than four feet, owing to the regular and constant plucking of the valuable young shoots. It therefore becomes a bushy stem with numerous and leafy branches. Its leaves are alternate, eliptical and veined, and its flowers white with a slight fragrance.

For the production of good tea the leaves must be fine and of soft texture. The plants therefore chosen by growers are those which "flush" frequently and copiously—that is, produce new and tender shoots—as upon this depends the quality of the yield. The system of "plucking leaf" is very interesting, as it is from this that the usual commercial terms take their origin. Plucking is usually spoken of as either "fine," "medium," or "coarse," and under these terms refers to the order of the leaf. The leaf bud (a) is very soft and tender, as is also the first leaf (b) and the second leaf (c), but the lower leaves are coarser and naturally harder, being of longer growth. In fine "plucking," the leaf bud (a) and the two leaves (b and c) only are plucked. In medium "plucking" the next or third leaf (d) is taken, while in coarse "plucking" the fourth (e) and sometimes the fifth (f) is taken.

The more leaves there are included of the "flush-plucked," the larger of course will be the yield per acre, but the quality of the finished tea will be proportionately poorer. The names distinguishing the commercial varieties of tea have their origin mainly from Chinese terms and in a general way indicate a gradation of qualities from the delicate leaf bud (a) down to the large, hard-grown leaf. Keeping in view the diagram given herewith, the leaves have been named as follows from the character of the tea they are supposed to make:

(a) Flowery Pekoe.
(b) Orange Pekoe.
(c) Pekoe.
(d) Souchong 1.
(e) Souchong 2.
(f) Congou.

The very excellent climate of the tea-growing districts of Ceylon causes new shoots to be produced very rapidly. It is very necessary, therefore, some times to prune severely in order to give the necessary rest to the plant, but so forcing is the climate that in the course of a few months the growth again appears and yields its crop with renewed youth. The object of the maker is to wither, roll, ferment and dry the leaf and to accomplish this varied processes are arranged. Immediately on arrival at the factory from the "plucking" the leaf is spread out thinly on large wire or canvas shelves to wither, so that the air can pass freely around it. To accomplish this successfully there must be good light, warmth and dry atmosphere, and under ordinary circumstances this will have been accomplished in about twenty hours. The object in "withering" is that the leaf may become soft and limp, and that it may be susceptible of receiving a good twist when put into the rolling machine. In withering the leaf loses about one-third its weight and in the following processes about 40 per cent. The next process, that of "rolling," is accomplished by passing the leaf between two surfaces, the lower one being much larger than the upper one. It usually takes about one hour for this process. The leaf is considered sufficiently rolled when it is well twisted, but being in a mushy state it will often hold together in lumps. It is necessary, therefore, to pass it through another machine called a "roll-breaker," and attached to which is a "sifter" which separates the fine from the coarse leaf. The next process is that of "fermentation," and to accomplish this the rolled leaf is spread out in drawers in a way in which the air can have free access and is left to ferment.

This process is the great distinguishing feature of black tea manufacturing and it is from this time onwards that the natural leaf takes the character of black. Very great care and observation is necessary to know just when the roll is sufficiently fermented, as upon the correct fermentation depends to a great extent the ultimate quality and value of the finished tea. The roll will ferment rapidly or otherwise according to atmospheric conditions, and the experienced man will take all this into consideration. When sufficiently fermented the leaf assumes a bright, coppery aspect and gives off a pleasant but peculiar odor. In this process a great loss of tannin is effected by the conversion of part of the tannic acid into sugar and the expert workman can largely modify the flavor of the tea by careful watching and at just the right moment hastening the tea through for "firing." This is accomplished by passing the tea into highly heated air, the temperature of which is regulated by the rapidity or otherwise with which the fermentation has progressed. The roll is spread upon wire trays which are passed into the heated chamber at a temperature of about 100 degrees Fahrenheit. The proper condition is reached when the tea has assumed a good black color and is so brittle as to break at the least attempt to bend it. At the termination of these processes the weighing of the finished tea has revealed a loss of 75 per cent. of the original green leaf. The finished tea is now prepared for packing by being passed through a grading-sifting machine by which the tea is sorted into its various grades by means of an arrangement of different sized meshes which separate the tea into the following commercial varieties: Broken Pekoe, Pekoe, Souchong, Congou and Dust.

Great care is given to this stage of the manufacture, as upon judicious sifting depends the proper and regular grading from the commercial standpoint, and any given grade should always maintain its uniformity.

The final bulking of each separate grade with similar grades made at different dates is also of the utmost importance and it is usual to give the bulked tea an additional slight "firing" process to remove any remaining moisture and give uniform character, when it is at once packed, sealed and chested as we know it on the market.

FORMOSA TEA DEVELOPMENT.

THE tea districts of Formosa lie chiefly in the north and northwest of the island, in about the same latitude as those of Foochow and Amoy in China, and Pachar and Sylhet in India, but are several degrees farther north than the tea-growing districts of Ceylon.

The origin of tea growing in Formosa is unknown, but it is supposed to have been introduced from China in the early fifties, at which time two plantations were in existence. About the year 1866 some plants were introduced from China, mainly from the district of Foochow, and an attempt was then made to persuade the Chinese farmers to cultivate these plantations, but without success. It was not until several years afterwards that there was any material increase in the production. About 1880, however, great extensions were carried out. It will be easy to see, therefore, that the age of tea growing in Formosa is of comparative recent growth.

A careful study of the climatic conditions prevailing in Formosa fail to show any particular circumstance likely to be productive of any special flavor. The tea, however, develops a character entirely of its own, and in that way has made a distinct and separate market.

The soil, too, is a peculiar one, being partly of volcanic origin, and consists in part of reddish clay loam of good depth. As a rule a light and free soil is found on the steep slopes of the hills and the heavier soils on the plateaux extending southward, the centre of the tea districts. These are at an elevation of from 300 to 800 feet above sea level, with steep hill slopes reaching to nigh on 1,000 feet.

There are some eight separate varieties of the tea plant cultivated in Formosa. The favorite and leading variety, however, is the Chishima bush which has a characteristic easily distinguished from other growth. It has a remarkable feature of adapting itself to the peculiar soil of Formosa; there is nothing exactly of the same character in either Ceylon or India. It is from this variety that the finest Oolongs are produced.

In order to preserve this variety in its integrity, a system has been in force of propagation, by means of cuttings or layers, a system which in itself is somewhat expensive but is considered necessary to preserve the purity of the tea plant and thus maintain the true character of the Oolong tea.

The tea gardens of Formosa are mostly small acreages of land, seldom exceeding four acres, owned and cultivated by native farmers, who, like their kinsmen of the mainlands, take particular pains with, and pride in, their gardens and products. Formosa Oolong finds its best and largest market in Canada and the States, but is fast gaining popularity in the English market.

The planting of the bushes is carried out with great care, and they are preserved in rows several feet apart, thus allowing for ploughing and manuring all round the bushes, which is regularly done some four times a year. Pruning is seldom carried out, and when it is done is performed by simply cutting the bush some six inches from the ground. There are usually about 4,000 bushes per acre.

The average yield of tea reported by the Government is from 160 to 200 bushels per acre. Plucking commences when the bushes are three years old. The first or Spring pluckings are performed with great care, and are brought from the field in large baskets twice a day, at forenoon and in the evening. A coolie will seldom pick more than twelve pounds per day.

The houses built in these districts for use as factories are of a very primitive order. The buildings are usually in the form of a quadrangle, one side of which is open, or merely closed with a light fence. The centre part is sometimes used for drying, whilst the wings are utilized for the purpose of tea manufacture. At one side is the firing pan set in a brick stove; wood is usually the fuel in favor. A light bamboo rack is used for carrying the trays when set aside to wither.

In some districts the morning "pickings" are placed in the sun, spread out on bamboo mats during the heat of the day, and occasionally turned. The evening leaf is usually manufactured the same night as gathered, and does not receive the "sunning" process. Should the pickings be done during showery weather it is the custom to keep them over night and "sun-dry" them the next day. It would appear, however, as though the process of "sunning" is not considered as an absolute necessity for best Oolongs, but it would seem rather to be resorted to for the simple purpose of removing dew or external moisture.

After "sunning," the leaf is placed on the trays and taken into the manufactory for thorough drying, and turned regularly during a period of several hours, according to the condition of weather and atmosphere. During this process the leaf is expected to assume a brownish tint at the tips, and also to curl up slightly. The usual temperature at which the leaf is kept during this process is about 83 degrees F. The leaf is then thrown into large trays to the depth of several inches and repeatedly turned by coolies about every ten minutes, keeping the leaf at a slightly increased temperature. At the end of about two hours, when the leaf has reached a temperature of about 85 degrees, it is thrown into deep baskets and placed close to the furnace before mentioned. During this process the tips of the leaves have become decidedly browner and give off a peculiarly attractive fruity odor.

Panning.

The leaf has now probably lost twenty per cent. of its original weight, and is ready for the process of "panning." The pan is a thin iron bowl, six to seven inches deep, and about two feet three inches to two feet six inches in diameter, fixed two feet six inches above the ground into a brick furnace, and heated with wood. In some houses, two pans are used; in others, the tea is panned twice in the same pan. A large double handful of leaf is taken and thrown into the pan, a coolie rapidly turning it over by drawing his hands towards him down the sides and bottom of the pan, and then throwing the leaf back across the pan and rapidly repeating this for five minutes. The leaf crackles slightly, emitting a burnt flesh odor, some steam being given off, the leaf becoming somewhat sticky and attaining a temperature of 135 deg. F, the heat of the pan being 212 deg. F.

It is now transferred to the second pan, the temperature of which varies from 218 deg. F to 257 deg. F, where the process is continued for another five minutes, when the leaf is rapidly thrown out on to a mat, placed behind the panning coolies, stray leaves being swept out with a damp cloth or bamboo brush. The temperature of the leaf, as it leaves the second pan, is 167 deg. F, but this falls to 95 deg. F during the ten minutes rolling which immediately followed.

After "panning" the heap of leaf is taken up by another coolie, who immediately begins hand-rolling it on the mat, exerting considerable pressure, but without causing much exudation of sap, and continuing this for five minutes. The roll is then handed on to a second coolie, who, seated on a bamboo crossbar, repeats the rolling for a further five minutes, making ten minutes roll in all, the last operation being performed with the feet.

Drying.

The ball of leaf is then opened onto a bamboo tray, the leaves being carefully separated before drying, which is commenced immediately after the rolling. The baskets employed for this purpose are about 2 ft. 6 in. high, and 2 ft. 3 in. in diameter, open at both ends and slightly constricted at the centre, where the tray or sieve carrying the tea rests. A circular hole in the ground, about 8 in. in diameter and 12 in. deep, is filled with charcoal, ignited and allowed to burn until all inflammable gases have been consumed. The glowing charcoal is then covered with a layer of wood-ashes to equalize and regulate the diffusion of heat, the basket being then placed over the hole. The tea to be dried is placed in the sieve and allowed to remain over the fire for some time, the basket being removed occasionally to allow of the leaf being turned — the whole drying taking about three hours.

This completes the local preparation, and the leaf, which is now crisp but not fully desiccated, is kept in cotton bags, awaiting removal to the centres, where the tea is finally fired and packed for export. The charcoal used in the basket-firing both in the local and final preparation, is made from a tree (the Acacia richii) which closely resembles the Melanoxlyn in foliage. This tree is found planted throughout the tea districts, but it is not indigenous to Formosa.

In some houses rolling is sometimes commenced with the feet and finished by hand, or rolled by the feet altogether, the latter method being the more general; but very fine quality teas are rolled by hand only.

Firing.

The locally prepared tea, packed loosely in cotton or light jute bags containing about 70 lbs., is purchased by middlemen, and is then carried by coolies to the nearest station to be despatched by rail. On arrival at the hong or tea-firing godown, the bags are opened and the leaves carefully picked over by girls and women, seated in open verandahs, all yellow leaf being removed before the tea is re-fired. The bulk of the leaf arriving being very coarse, the work of removing the bad leaf is considerable, and provides employment daily throughout the tea season for many thousand hands, several houses employing over one hundred daily. The firing godowns are large rooms. There is no machinery, but in the floor are several double rows of holes two feet deep and two feet in diameter, with bricked sides, the holes being one foot apart. Between each double row is a passage about three feet wide and a few inches below the level of the top of the holes.

From 25 to 40 lbs. of charcoal is placed in each hole, ignited and allowed to burn until all inflammable gases are consumed, and nothing but pure glowing charcoal remains—this taking about twelve hours. The fire is then covered with a layer of charcoal ash, which is carefully smoothed over, the object being to regulate the amount of air and heat. There is an enormous loss of heat in this process, but it is essential to have the charcoal free from any combustible matter likely to taint the tea.

When the fires are ready, the tea is put in the baskets about four inches thick, spread over a sieve, seven to eight pounds to each basket, and the baskets placed over the holes, similar baskets being used to those described above. The tea is left undisturbed. Before turning, the baskets are lifted off the fire and placed in the passage, the removal being necessary to prevent any leaf in the turning falling through into the charcoal and creating smoke. With occasional turning, the firing lasts altogether from five to twelve hours, the best quality being fired the longest.

The temperature of the tea during firing is maintained at about 212 deg. F. The fires last from twelve to fourteen days, and are capable of drying, working day and night, 224 lbs. of tea without replenishing.

After firing, the tea is packed direct into lead-lined chests. The boxes used for this purpose are of a light flimsy nature, seldom more than ⅜ in. thick. They are pasted over with paper covering, colored with flowered designs, and afterwards matted and bound with rattan, the matting being procured from Canton.

The teas after refiring have a baked, highly-fired smell, the liquor is improved in color and pungency, but would appear to have lost somewhat in flavor. There is a loss in weight in this final firing carying from 8 to 15 per cent., making an outturn of only 21 to 23 per cent. on the green leaf; but the teas are doubtless more completely desiccated than Indian and Ceylon machine made teas. There are seven or eight British and American firms, and a large number of Chinese, engaged in refiring tea; most of their firing godowns are at Daidotei, near the capital Taipeh. The tea being required chiefly for Canada and the States, is shipped largely via Suez.

Paochongs.

The term is applied to the highly scented packed teas consumed mostly by Chinese in Singapore and Java.

In this manufacture, advantage is taken of the property tea possesses of absorbing and retaining external odors, and consists essentially in mixing certain strongly-scented flowers with inferior quality Oolongs or black teas, and removing the flowers after their aroma has been absorbed.

The usual process is to spread out the tea in a layer six inches to one foot thick, and to cover it with freshly picked flowers moistened with water. The mass is then thoroughly mixed together, piled in a heap, and covered with cloth to retain the moisture and aroma. The tea absorbs the moisture from the flowers, and becomes sufficiently soft to undergo slight fermentation, while a peculiar smell is developed, differing from the original scent of the flowers.

The temperature of the heap rises considerably, owing to oxidation; and the white petals rapidly change to a reddish brown, due to an oxidizing enzyme, which also possibly acts on some of the constituents of the moistened leaves.

The heap remains untouched for several hours, depending on the variety of flower used, and is then spread open and the flowers carefully removed by hand, or, if possible, by sieves.

The tea is now fired in the baskets previously described, for six or seven hours, a somewhat lower temperature of 180 deg. F. being maintained.

The flowers employed in this manufacture are grown in special gardens situated near the town of Daitotei.

Of these the jasmines are the most valuable, and gardenia the least. Thev are mixed with the tea in varying proportions, and remain in contact for from ten to fourteen hours, or longer, according to the rapidity which which the petals give up their essential oil.

The teas prepared in this manner are too strongly scented for direct consumption, and are mixed with untreated tea in the proportion of ten per cent. to thirty per cent. before being packed in paper packets of about five-eighths of a pound, and these in half-chests.

INDIAN TEA CULTIVATION.

A NOTE on the production of tea in India, by Mr. J. A. Robertson, on special duty in the Department of Commerce and Industry, puts the area under cultivation at the end of 1904 at 524,517 acres, nearly two-thirds being in the Brahmaputra and Surma Valleys.

Since 1885 the area has increased 83 per cent. and the production 211 per cent. The increase in pounds in 1903 was over 20,000,000, and in 1904 over 13,161,000. This is very remarkable, as the area has contracted during the last two years.

The capital invested is Rs.3,42,00,000 by companies registered in India, and Rs.14,81,00,000 by London companies, or over Rs.18,00,00,000 in all.

There are 551,275 persons employed, or 1.05 per acre. Out of 201,719,000 lbs. produced yearly, on the average of the last five years, 196,642,000 lbs. were exported, leaving 5,000,000 lbs. surplus. Adding 1,750,000 lbs. of foreign tea, the gross consumption in India becomes 6,000,000 lbs.

The recent fall in prices has affected all qualities.

The limit of the yield of tea of ordinary quality from the existing area must, it is said, be soon attained, as only 17,500 acres of immature plants remain to come into bearing, and when this limit has been reached production cannot at once spring forward in response to a larger demand, as new plantings would not yield for some years.

TABLOID TEA.

COMPRESSED tea is common enough in Siberia, but, so far as known, is an unknown commodity in this country.

It is an ordinary black tea, which is very widely used by the Buriats of the trans-Baikal region, by whom the herb thus prepared is drunk, flavored with salt and sour cream. Sugar would be preferred, of course, but it is either unattainable or too high priced, costing, as it does, from 75 cents to $1 a pound.

The compressed tea is of a very good quality. Just now it is of interest because it is used by the Russian officers in Manchuria. The tea is compressed by superb modern machinery, evidence of which is afforded by the splendid specimen of die sinking on the tablet itself. Such has been the pressure employed that the formerly soft and yielding leaves assume the appearance of a hard tile, which can with difficulty be cut with a knife. As a general rule a mallet or hammer is used to break off a piece, very much as if the tablet were of stone.

The tea employed is a straight Souchong, which needs no cream because nature has given it a slightly creamy taste, and also one that is feebly saccharine, so that it requires less sugar than other teas. In flavor this compressed tea cannot be compared with the natural herb. It is much flatter in taste, but it possesses the same stimulating properties. A piece the size of a thimble is sufficient for a large, strong cup. No teapot is necessary. Scalding water is poured on the nugget in a cup and in a few minutes the tea is ready.

No cementing agent whatever is used in compressing high grade tea—not even sugared water or artificial heat. The little heat that is generated in compression starts the tannic acid in the leaves, which is all the adhesive required to hold the block together. A tablet thus compressed may be exposed to soaking rains with little danger of injury. As a general rule, however, compressed tea is kept in worsted bags.

PUSHING YOUR TEA TRADE.

Before attempting to push a grade of tea it is very advisable to be absolutely sure on two points, and these are :

1st. To carefully choose the tea, or teas, upon which the effort is to be made, and

2nd. To be absolutely sure that the chosen tea, or teas, can be exactly replaced during the existing season, and matched as closely as possible during succeeding seasons.

THE EMPEROR'S TEA.

The tea used in the immediate household of the Emperor of China is treated with the utmost care. It is raised in a garden surrounded by a wall, so that neither man nor beast can get anywhere near the plants. At the time of the harvest those collecting these leaves must abstain from eating fish or strong foods, that nothing may spoil the aroma of the tea ; they must bathe three times a day, and, in addition, must wear gloves while picking the tea for the Chinese court.

A MUCH INTERESTED MAN.

"He's interested in many industries, I believe ?"

"He is."

"Is he in the shoe business ?"

"Yes, he has quite a foothold there."

"How about the glove business ?"

"He recently took a hand in it."

"And the selling of canes ?"

"He carries them."

"And hats ?"

"He has them on his mind, too."

"What else ?"

"He puts up umbrellas and turns out lamps."

A DOUBLE PROFIT

Royal Baking Powder Pays a Greater Profit to the Grocer Than any Other Baking Powder He Sells.

Profit means real money in the bank. It does not mean "percentage," which may represent very little actual money. A grocer often has the chance to sell either:

1. A baking powder for 45c. a pound and make a profit of 5c. or 6c., or,
2. A baking powder for 10c. a pound and make "20 per cent profit," which means only 2c. actual money. Which choice should you take?

Royal Baking Powder makes the customer satisfied and pleased, not only with the baking powder, but also with the flour, butter, eggs, etc., which the grocer sells.

This satisfaction of the customer is the foundation of the best and surest profit in business—it is permanent. Do not take the risk of selling a cheap alum baking powder; some day the customer may find out about the alum, and then your best profit in the customer's confidence is gone.

Royal Baking Powder pays greater profits to the grocer than any other baking powder he sells.

THE "BUMPER" CROP AND THE WESTERN TRADE

IN Western Canada during the weeks and months that constitute the critical period in the growth of the wheat crop the weather is by no means a mere commonplace subject of polite conversation. So much depends upon it that it is one of the most important topics and it is discussed in Winnipeg, not casually but seriously—on the street, in the business office, at the club, in the home, and always in its bearing upon the season's wheat crop.

"Our crops get on my nerves," remarked a prominent business man in Winnipeg to a representative of this paper one day in August. "Of course we can't get along without crops in this country but I wish I could forget about that wheat crop for a few hours each day. I can think of nothing else but wheat and rust scares. Every time the sky is cloudy during these days when we want bright sunshine I think of the wheat, and I begin to calculate the dangers of rust and the probable loss expressed in dollars and cents just as in the Spring reporters on the daily papers give full scope to their imaginations in calculating how many million dollars each rainfall was worth to the west." This man is not in the grain business, he is not a speculator in grain. The chances are that in all his life he has never bought or grown a bushel of wheat, but he is a wholesale man with large investments in a big business, with a great amount staked upon the prosperity of the country and he knows the importance to business men in all parts of Canada, east as well as west, of a "bumper" wheat crop in 1905.

Interest was by no means confined to the west. Eastern newspapers devoted almost as much space to "crop stories" as did the Winnipeg papers. Winnipeg newspapermen who act as correspondents for Toronto and Montreal dailies were never at a loss for news to send east during July and August. Crop stories, news and interviews were always acceptable and the papers paid the telegraph tolls without a murmur. And the east had good reason to be interested this year, for the Montreal and Toronto business houses had staked very much upon the success of the crop. Their accounts in the west are large and they are looking for payment from the proceeds of the wheat sales. Moreover, it is in the west that all big Canadian wholesale and manufacturing firms find a field for the expansion of their trade. A prosperous west means a ready market during the coming year for commodities of all kinds.

Crop estimates differ according to the temperament, optimistic or pessimistic, of the man who estimates, but there is something in the bracing western atmosphere that breeds confidence in the present and future of the country and the optimists have a large majority with many country polling sub-divisions yet to hear from. Probably the optimists have had so much their own way in the discussion that the actual figures will be disappointing, but if so it will be because the over-confident predictions have led the general public to expect too much.

The Smile that Won't Come Off.

It will be remembered that the over-confident estimates of the population of Winnipeg by real estate men in that city led to a general impression that there were at least 100,000 people in Manitoba's capital. Hence there was keen disappointment a few months ago when it was found that the actual population is, in round numbers, 80,000—foolish disappointment when it is remembered that the population has actually doubled in four years.

But whether the crop estimates have or have not been too optimistic it is certain that the 1905 wheat crop is by very much the largest on record. Conditions have been unusually favorable and the area under cultivation is larger than ever before.

In an interview about two months ago Hon. R. P. Roblin, Premier of Manitoba and Minister of Agriculture, stated that he was willing to go on record with an estimate of 100,000,000 bushels. His position at the head of the Department of Agriculture in one of the three prairie wheat-growing Provinces gives Premier Roblin some exceptional opportunities to form an accurate idea of the size of the crop.

The Manitoba Free Press each year sends out during the critical period in the growth of the crop a corps of special staff correspondents and from their reports of conditions in all the wheat-growing districts of the west an estimate of the total crop is made.

If the Free Press correspondents err in the preparation of their reports it is not on the side of over-confidence. Their stories of rust last August were vigorously denied from certain districts which considered themselves maligned and in many instances there would seem to be good ground for the complaints. Certain it is that damage by rust this year has been infinitesimal.

Last year the Free Press estimate of the total crop was probably the closest made by any paper, consequently the estimate of that journal this year is entitled to due respect, and when it places the 1905 wheat crop at 90,000,000 bushels most people are prepared to believe that Premier Roblin's estimate of 100,000,000 bushels may be very nearly correct.

With unpardonable lack of respect for Professor Mavor the Swan River and other districts which in his report he classes as unfit for cultivation have produced large quantities of wheat, in many places the average production being 25 and 30 bushels to the acre.

Now what does this mean to Canada? It means that during the next few weeks and months perhaps $70,000,000 will be paid to the western farmers for the 1905 wheat crop. The banks have been making every effort to provide the necessary cash and the railways the necessary rolling stock to handle this immense crop as quickly as possible. Thanks to our elastic and fluid branch bank system the banks have had little trouble and from the lack of complaints it would seem that the railways are satisfying the exacting demands of the impatient grain grower.

There was a time in the infancy of the C.N.R. and when the C.P.R. in the west was under less efficient management, when the western grain growers were loud in their complaints that the railways could not supply sufficient cars to handle the grain. But since the C.N.R. lines have been extended and the C.P.R. in the west has been under the capable management of Vice-President Whyte, a western man in whom all the west has absolute confidence, these complaints are seldom heard. The task is greater this year than ever before, but complaints are conspicuous mainly by the infrequency with which they are heard.

All Canada is interested to know what proportion of the crop the railways can handle before the close of lake navigation, for all Canada is interested in knowing the approximate amount of money the western farmer will have immediately available. How will he dispose of this ready money? Will he buy more land, pianos or automobiles with his ready cash, or will he pay his debts first and make his investments for profit or pleasure with the balance? This is the question in which all business men are interested and they all agree that the debts must be paid first.

Not in years has so much depended on a single crop. The obligations of the west are heavy; the country storekeeper has been carrying his farmer customers, the wholesalers and manufacturers have been carrying the retailer and they themselves have been supported by the banks. All are interested in seeing debts paid before any further land speculation is indulged in. The crop is large enough to pay off these debts and leave a surplus for investment. The wholesalers and retailers are determined to collect their outstanding accounts and if they can do so there is no doubt that the immediate net result of the 1905 "bumper" crop will be to place the prosperity of Western Canada upon a solid foundation. An effective agency in accomplishing this result is the Retail Merchants' Association of Western Canada, with whose work all readers of The Canadian Grocer are familiar.

The 1905 crop is large enough to pay all outstanding store bills and leave a handsome surplus in the pockets of the consuming public of the west. There is, therefore, an excellent market in the new country west of the Great Lakes for manufactured products of all kinds. Canadian, British and foreign manufacturers are well advised in looking to Western Canada for the expansion of their trade. The west wants the best that is made and in a prosperous year it is able to pay cash for what it receives. The encouragement of the spirit of enterprise among manufacturers and merchants in the east is greatly to be desired and cannot fail to meet with success and in the very near future reap the richest rewards when the population and buying powers of the west are much greater than they are now. The advantages of "getting in on the ground floor" are obvious and they need not be elaborated upon. He is a rash man who would attempt now to set bounds to the development of the Canadian Northwest.

Probably no man is better qualified to judge of the possibilities of the Northwest than Dr. Saunders, the Director of Experimental Farms. In his well-known pamphlet on "Wheat Growing in Canada," he says, under the heading "Reasonable Prophecy":

"The total imports of wheat and flour into Great Britain in 1902 were equivalent in all to about 200,000,000 bushels of wheat. Were one-fourth of the land said to be suitable for cultivation in Manitoba and the three provisional Territories under crop with wheat annually, and the average production equal to that of Manitoba for the past ten years, the total crop would be over 812,000,000 bushels. This would be ample to supply the home demand for 30,000,000 inhabitants (supposing the population of Canada should by that time reach that figure) and meet the present requirements of Great Britain three times over." This estimate deals only with a portion of the west, and it leaves the large eastern Provinces out of consideration altogether. From this it would seem to be quite possible that Canada may be in a position, within comparatively few years, after supplying all home demands, to furnish Great Britain with all the wheat and flour she requires and leave a surplus for export to other countries.

With a rural population on the western plains in 1902 of about 400,000, over 67,000,000 bushels of wheat were produced. Add to this the wheat grown in Ontario and the other eastern Provinces and we already have a total of over 93,000,000 bushels. These figures are full of promise for the future of Canada as a great wheat-exporting country."

OLD-TIME HUMOR.

THE attention of the antiquary has been attracted to the old-time miller. Apparently he dabbled in the arts, as witness the eccentric Master Oliver, whose tomb upon Highdown Hill, near Worthing, England, was and still is an object visited by the curious. It was prepared by himself with Scripture texts and verses of his own composing. He was carried to the grave in 1793 by folk garbed in white, and a girl in white read a sermon as requiem. This suggests a latent Druidism, faint traces of which do exist. But it is on record:

"The queerest miller in the traditions of the Sussex Downs was Master Coombs, whose boast it was that his antique little mill, not far from Newhaven, had belonged to his ancestors from the days of Henry VIII. He once made a strong asseveration as to a statement he had put forth, that if it were not true he would never enter his mill again. Upon the statement being proved incorrect, he kept his word. He would spend hours every day upon the upper step of the mill stairs, but never to the end of his life did he enter the building."

One of his freaks was the painting of his mill-horse. The hues varied frequently. One week a whole market town would be startled by an animal which was pea green; next month it would be blue, then rose-pink. Perhaps someone had told him tales about the chameleon.

Millers' carts were almost unknown in his day (1780), and the grists were carried home on horseback. Master Coombs as he rode with several bags and observed that his steed was overladen, used instead of dismounting to take one of the bags upon his own shoulders, complacently saying, "The marciful man is marciful to his baste." His marriage scarcely came up to his ideal, and in expansive moments he owned that this was in a measure his own fault. "For," he said, "as I was a-gooin acrass Excete Lane to be married at Denton Church I heerd a voice from Heaven a-saying unto me, 'Will-yam Coombs! Will-yam Coombs! If so be that you marry Mary Briggs you'll always be a miserable man!' And so I've always found it," he added, "and I be a miserable man."

There was a general belief that an honest miller had a tuft—or "tot"—of hair growing in the palm of each hand, and that the only honest miller ever known with such a tot lived at Chalvington, near Lewes. Finding success in business impossible he hanged himself in his own mill. Master Coombs had no such tot, and had no reason for one. This did not impair his length of days, however.

An advertising campaign, says Fame,, is like a journey. There is a certain stated distance to be covered. You may not go the whole way without pausing. Perhaps you go a few miles to-day, and a few more to-morrow, but you keep right on toward the goal always adding a little to the sum total of your miles. If you do not complete the distance, the whole is incomplete and a failure, but the rounded out, perfect journey of regulated stages, symbolizes well the well maintained advertising campaign.

WINDOW AND INTERIOR DISPLAYS

THE WINDOW DISPLAY.

WHEN a dealer has windows in his store he has success within his reach. Elbow grease never comes amiss in window dressing. Never spare it.

Every well-dressed window is a sort of salesman. What is yours?

It ought to be always "No trouble to show goods," and you have a show window.

When the window "pull" is the right one, the dealer won't need a social "pull" or a political "pull." Give us the window "pull" every time.

More and better use of the show window and less ranting against the tactics of competitors would put some desponding dealers on Easy street.

The grocer should always find time to see to the window advertising. Of what profit is it to spend time and money on printing ink and neglect the show window?

While some merchants are thinking out the details of an elaborate design, other dealers are fixing up a display that makes no pretensions, but draws attention and sells goods.

Something different from the ordinary, something novel, is the great want in window displays. Never copy other windows closely; never follow the general custom as to the kinds of goods to be shown. Always try to be different. To be different is to be successful nine times out of ten.

Does your window tell the story you wish it to convey? Does it tell a story of system, of principle and high ideals? Or does it tell a story of slip-shod treatment of customers? Or is it a dumb window so far as real impressions are concerned?

If you feature your goods in the window, using all accessories in a subordinate position, your displays ought to sell goods. When some foreign object is made to dominate the window trim, the goods being apologetically thrust into obscure places, the effort is likely to be very small. As "it's results we want," we advise the featuring of the goods.

When the window is dumb, the business suffers. The window must be made to talk, and to talk freely, cogently and interestingly. What does your window say to the public? Does it say: Here is a nice store, with a well-selected stock, a staff of competent clerks, a satisfactory delivery system—does it say all this and more? If it does not, you should improve its utterance, and make the store, the goods and the service agree with the story of the window.

IMPORTANCE OF DISPLAY.

THE slogan of the moment is, and should be, that every department should push its business steadily forward. Business must not stand still. Everything should and must expand. If a department stands still its condition is anxiously and immediately looked into and the remedy applied, because the astute proprietor well knows that any department that comes to a sudden halt will not be long in descending the down grade.

Model Window Dressing—The "Illuminated Castle."

Now, the decorating is a department in itself, and the trimmer is just as responsible for the conduct of its affairs as any other department in the building. He should closely scrutinize his expenses and see that the goods entrusted to him for display are not impaired in value while in his possession.

Novelty in Display.

Of all the elements that go to make a good window display, perhaps the most important is novelty. It is the trimmer with brains, originality, thought, and unique ideas who will be most successful in drawing the attention and coin of the realm to his establishment.

There are few trimmers who are blessed with a sufficiency of new ideas to run them for a year without at least a few thoughts that have been sprouted or originated by others. For this very reason the decorator and retailer should be on the alert for new ideas that can be revamped and turned to good account.

Don't forget that a hint may often be found in some other lines of business that can be advantageously adopted or slightly altered to ring in a telling and creditable display in your chosen line.

No good trimmer can afford to ignore a single suggestion that can in any way be turned to account. The cleverer you are the more you will appreciate and improve upon what you see. None of us are yet so bright as to know it all, and none of us do our work so perfectly and thorough that it cannot be bettered. Just when you think that your work is about perfect is the time when you are liable to run across the same work executed just a trifle better. That is exactly what excites emulation and acts as a spur to bring out the best that is in us.

Never rest satisfied with yourself and your best endeavors. Window trimming is like learning, there is so much ahead that we don't know that the little we do know seems so puny, insignificant and small that it ought to keep us humble.

Aim at Results.

Methods are many, designs differ, ideas vary, windows are architecturally different, and stocks never alike. Yet the aim of every trimmer should be the same—to excite in the mind of the public a desire for possession of the goods displayed.

It may not be generally known that the word "advertise" means literally to "turn to." Therefore your displays should be original and attractive enough to cause the passer-by "to turn to" them. In other words, they should be designed primarily to catch the eye of the passer-by.

The next desideratum is that the display be of such a nature as to induce a generous percentage of the gazers to enter the store and become purchasers.

In order to get best results severe extremes must be avoided. For instance, a display that is simply beautiful to look upon without pushing home some salient point or argument to the possible buyer is not apt to accomplish much.

Model Window Dressing—The "Bridge" Idea.

A window may be very beautiful, may even stop people in crowds, and not sell a dollar's worth of merchandise. That may be good window dressing, but it is bad business from a business point of view, and it is business that most people are after, not simply glory.

Give First Attention.

Usually a salesman, the brightest and most inventive of the store's personnel, is selected or commissioned to "dress the windows." But he is so burdened with other duties, expected to sell as many goods, and have as large a book at the day's end as those whose duties are only to handle customers, that he cannot possibly do both satisfactorily. This is manifestly unfair, and we believe one of the principal reasons why so many windows are neglected and unattractive. He is first of all a clerk in the eyes of his employer, and being a clerk he is expected to give foremost attention to "clerking," as our rural friends and brothers term it. Decorating, if his trimming duties may be dignified by the word, is a side issue with him. Not because of any desire on his part to make it so, but because his employer insists upon regulating his duties in such a manner that he cannot alter them.

It is false economy, impolitic, passe, weak-kneed and limpy to make the decorations the secondary part of the decorator's duties, and the number of stores that are backward and only semi-profitable in consequence thereof are legion.

Interior Correspondence.

We would like to see more of our merchants awake from their lethargic slumbers and infuse life, energy and system into their business. Many great stores grow from small beginnings, but they must be watched over with an acute sense of the management which fertilizes and promotes, that they may grow to be big and sturdy, and stand as fitting monuments to the industry, perseverance and "get up" of the men who planted them.

The chief fertilizer should be system and prominent display. Magnetic windows assist in getting people through the portals; the decorations on every side should then make the interior enjoyable to your visitors. No little store will ever become great, and big, and powerful, if a niggardly hand is at the rudder.

WINDOW ADVERTISING.

A grocery store that pays a great deal of attention to its ledge trims, fixtures and interior arrangement generally and lets the window stand from one week's end to the other is getting things reversed. If there is any difference the window should be better than the interior of the store. The window is to get people to come inside. A fine trim on the inside is no good for that purpose. If you get customers inside the store once you have progressed far towards getting their trade. Hence the importance of "pulling in" windows.

FORWARD.

Not backward, not backward, not e'en for a night,
To badly kept windows and oft without light,
But forward, yea forward, to that glorious day
When every grocer will have a display
Of goods that at once will attract the eye
Of all who may chance to be passing by.
Instead of the "cans" that you see on all sides,
Try fruits, fancy goods—you've plenty inside.
So forward, yea forward, once more be it said,
Reverse the old custom, well-displayed windows instead.

PRICE-CUTTING.

To cut or not to cut, that is the question.
Whether 'tis not better in the end
To let the chap who knows not the worth
Have the work at cut-throat price, or,
To take up arms against his competition
And, by opposing cut for cut, end it.
To cut—and by cutting put the other cutter
Out of business—'tis a consummation
Devoutly to be wish'd. To cut — to slash—
Perchance myself to get it in the neck—
Ay, there's the rub; for when one starts
To meet the other fellow's price, 'tis like as not
He's up against it good and hard.
To cut and slash is not to end the confusion
And the many evils the trade is pestered with;
Nay, nay, Pauline; 'tis but the forerunner
Of debt and mortgage such course portends.
'Tis well to get the price the work is worth
And not be bullied into doing it
For what So-and-So will do it for.
Price-cutting doth appear unseemly
And fit only for the man who knows not
What his work is worth, and who, ere long,
By very stress of making vain comparison
'Twixt bank account and liabilities,
Will make his exit from the business.

PROGRESSIVE RETAILING

ARE you a "merchant," or simply a "dealer?" What is the difference? The difference is so great that it cannot be told in a sentence. A "dealer" is a man who runs a store because he can do that better than anything else, or thinks he can, or, perhaps, it is easier than something else.

He jogs along in a come-to-day and go-to-day fashion, eking out a living somehow. He pays his debts as long as he can and ultimately lets the sheriff run things to a finish.

For years, perhaps, he was at the store regularly every morning, and remained until the close of the day's business, but in every other way drifted with the tide. He buys goods and sells some of them after a fashion, and thinks that as long as a certain amount of goods are exchanged for money every year he is making money, whereas the reverse is usually the case.

He goes on the principle that the goods on the shelves and counters are worth so much to him, regardless of whether they were bought this year, last year, or several years ago.

Merchandising an Art.

He finds it necessary to buy goods continually, in order to keep up the sales, and cannot understand why the clerks can not sell what goods they have instead of clamoring for new goods all the time. He has not studied merchandising deeply enough to understand that the intrinsic value of an article cuts no figure if the commercial value is lacking. He believes that because an article cost one dollar, he must get from one twenty-five to one fifty for it, or keep it, and he keeps on keeping his goods until they eat up their value in interest and insurance.

What to Do.

If you belong to this class—and the cap fits too many—wake up to your actual condition! Make up your mind that when you next invoice your stock you will know what you are really worth, truly and honestly. You have been deceiving yourself long enough. Pull out of the drawers and take off shelves all the old stock you have and turn it into money. Get all you can out of it, but get it quickly. Merchandise is only worth what it will bring—not one cent more. If an article will not sell for one dollar, mark it fifty cents; if it still sticks at fifty cents, mark it twenty-five cents. It takes courage; but remember that is what you have lacked, or the goods would not now be with you.

There are times when it is profitable to make a loss. Sounds odd, doesn't it? But it saves you from making a greater loss later on, and you must be willing to take the medicine that will cure, or else go under with that disease known commercially, and usually diagnosed, as "dry rot."

Few dealers realize the constantly increasing cost of portions of their stock, which is daily growing in amount, because original figures are adhered to as selling prices, regardless of the fact that certain articles have had their day.

Tied Up Capital.

Carrying a stock of dead or unsalable goods locks up so much capital that a dealer so situated finds it impossible to reap the benefits of cash discounts. His reputation for being a close buyer is lost; he pays longer prices for his goods; probably has to renew paper at maturity, and pay 7 per cent. interest, besides missing the plums that a traveler places before his quick-paying customers.

The Advantage of Cash.

A dealer who gets the reputation of "slow pay" is no longer sought by wholesalers when there are special bargains to be offered; for at such times only quick-paying buyers are appreciated. This difference frequently means that the dealer's competitors can sell certain goods and make reasonable profits at prices that represent actual cost to him.

Putting the knife into the prices of unsalable goods and getting rid of them is the only way to conduct a successful business. "The first loss is the best loss," and the smallest; yet, it is important to know the right time to take a loss and take it philosophically.

Solvent or Insolvent.

If your stock was put on the market to-morrow, how many men would pay more than 50c. on the dollar for it? Therefore although you have invoiced it at $24,000, it will only bring $12,000, and perhaps you have maturing liabilities of a like amount. Where do you stand? Simply on the sidewalk, perhaps at middle life, with your commercial career ended and life to begin anew.

The Need of Competence.

The fact is, there is an unfilled vacancy in many large stores. There is need of a man who has a good knowledge of merchandise, who should have the authority, and make it his business, to keep stocks clean and saleable, and who should decide the proper time to take a loss on unsalable goods, also to decide at what price deteriorated lines should be invoiced for inventory.

Fat Paper Balances.

The average proprietor, buyer, or manager, is so eager to make a satisfactory showing that he is tempted, and succumbs to temptation, to knowingly over invoice his stock, thus deceiving himself with wide open eyes. Take down your stock at what it is worth; not at what it is marked. Wake up before it is too late and find out where you stand, and what your true balance is. Have you the necessary backbone to do it? Think it over and decide. If you haven't, get some one who has.

Ordering New Goods.

Goods should not be ordered in and displayed until the season for selling them is near at hand. Don't have goods come into your store months in advance of your requirements, even though a liberal dating is offered on them. You require to, or should, carry increased insurance on them, but the greatest drawback is that your salespeople lose enthusiasm in them before the season for selling arrives. Enthusiasm in the goods you have bought has a great deal to do with sales and profits.

How much more interest is manifested in goods the first day they are in stock than thirty days later; and, apparently, how much easier the merchandise is sold? Besides, your customers dropping in every week have very keen eyes, and quickly become acquainted with the stock. There is food for reflection here. Assimilate it!

Care and Protection.

The broad facts brought out, and to be impressed upon the mind of the merchant, are that he must try and select known, honest help, and give the greatest care to his business system; protect himself and his employes by having that system so strong and reliable that small chance can occur of saddling blame upon the wrong person. The discovery of theft of merchandise or money in a store should be followed by an immediate effort to locate the source of loss. The system, while it may not altogether guard against theft, should at least point in the direction of the thieves.

The Cash Question.

Nothing should be left to chance; carelessness in change-making, or lack of particular system of keeping strict accounts; and when check books are used, laxity in letting the records pass between hands, when they may be altered through collusion,or in the interest of any of the parties concerned in the transaction—the salespeople, cashier, or office where checking up is performed—should all be guarded carefully, and strict rules and regulations, which are made next to impossible to infringe, should be instituted.

The Delivery Department.

Many parcels in cities are sent out on approval or c.o.d., and should be carefully watched, for frequently the money is paid by the customer and then the goods are credited as having been refused and consequently returned to stock; the proceeds going into the pocket of the salesman. Sometimes the delivery man gets the benefit by saying he put the goods back in stock. This fraud, while common, is sometimes difficult to detect when large stocks are carried and help busily engaged during the best part of the day.

TALKS TO RETAILERS.

STRONG emphasis must be placed upon the necessity of prompt delivery. People who order goods from you, order them because they want them. It is all right for you to complain of your customer who orders at the last minute—but make your complaint under your breath. Don't let the customer hear it. She may take her money elsewhere. You are in business to make money and you must do business just the way your customers desire—not the way you like to do it. We won't argue about the extra cost of delivery ; of course it is an extra expense, but it is the custom and custom is stronger than law.

If you have in your neighborhood two or three merchants in non-competing lines it may be possible for you to establish a co-operative delivery, each assuming a share of the expense and thus reducing by a considerable amount the expense to each individual. At a cost of about $50 per month to each of five merchants an automobile delivery can be established and maintained which will cover your territory much more thoroughly than wagons and horses could do. Better service in the way of delivery is worth while and in addition there is advertising value in a modern way of doing things such as this will be. There is a satisfaction to the purchaser in having an auto stop at the door and a neatly attired, possibly uniformed, attendant step out to make a delivery or take an order.

Too many merchants have allowed their deliveries to be made by careless, dirty, slovenly and impolite employes. This hurts your business. Perhaps you never noticed it but it does just the same.

Never mind the cost. Get good men to make your deliveries. It will be a good investment. He represents you. Let it be an adequate representation.

We will suppose that you have reformed, if reform was necessary ; that your store is neat, your clerks attentive and anxious to please, your prices right, and your deliveries prompt.

What next ? Let your customers and your prospective customers hear about it. Talk about it. Guarantee it. Advertise it, personally and by the use of printers' ink. Lose no possible opportunity. Now comes the question ; where and how ?

Advertising a retail store means simply a statement of facts, made to people who may be influenced by these facts, to buy goods of the advertiser. People of a certain sort or of many sorts ought to trade with you. There are reasons why they should. Hunt up these people and tell them these things. That is advertising.

As to the "where"—that is easy. You naturally draw your trade from a neighborhood, a section, a town or a country. The people in that locality, they are the ones you want to reach. In a small community much may be done by means of personal interviews and this must not be neglected. An occasional visit to your customers, especially to those whose trade you value, will bring its own reward.

ATTRACTIVE STORES.

IT is not necessary for a store to be fitted up with mahogany and marble in order that it should be attractive and up-to-date. Few storekeepers could afford to make a capital outlay of sufficient amount to provide such elaborate fittings. There are of course the necessary equipments for the attractive display of goods which every storekeeper must have for the proper preservation of his goods, and for the securing of economy of working.

The fitting up of a store requires a good deal of thought and care. Perhaps the first consideration is to have the store well lighted and the lights so arranged that the best possible effect can be obtained from the internal arrangements of the store. The modern store has become a place for show and display as well as a market, and a well lighted store is at once a place of attraction.

The arrangement of the store should be the next consideration. It is not sufficient that the stock should be arrayed in so many shelves around the walls of the store, but due consideration should be given as to the place such articles occupy. There are some goods which are better kept in a dark, cool corner. Other goods are better exposed to the air and light, and again some goods carry with them a strong aroma which is at once objectionable and injurious to other lines.

All these points should be carefully watched and provided for in the arrangement of a store. A well arranged, neat and tidy store is an advertisement within the reach of the simplest storekeeper, inexpensive and effectual.

SUGGESTIONS.

NEVER overcharge old customers one cent because you have their trade. Look after each one of them carefully as you do after a new customer whose trade you are trying to get.

Keep their likes and dislikes in mind. A woman is pleased by a grocer who says, "Mrs. Jones, I have in some fine Florida oranges such as you like," or by a meat man who remembers her partiality for good bacon and keeps a fine brand.

The same methods that hold regular customers will gain new ones.

Little accommodations that cost you nothing go a great way toward making and holding customers. They like a man who sells postage stamps as cheerfully as if he made money on them.

Make your store attractive. Everybody likes a tidy store, with fresh goods tastefully displayed, and neat, wide-awake clerks.

See that every person who enters is waited on promptly and politely. Nothing irritates a customer like waiting unnecessarily. When delay can't be helped, a clerk should say politely, "I will wait on you as quickly as possible, Mrs. Jones."

A clerk should never be permitted to stand chatting or dawdling for an instant when a customer is waiting. Never tolerate that indifferent, half-hearted way which seems to say, "I'm only waiting on customers as a particular favor." Make your clerks understand that every one in the store is expected to have eyes and ears open all the time and be ready to do everything possible to help the business.

Make your customers feel that their children or servants will be treated just as well as themselves in your store.

Encourage good clerks ; get rid of bad ones. Don't waste time trying to reform negligent and untidy clerks ; but, on the other hand, if any clerk shows he has your interest at heart, show him that you appreciate it.

THE ART OF BUYING.

THAT "goods well bought are half sold" is a saying which is as true as it is expressive. Probably if inquiries were made a great number of failures to secure success by retail merchants could be traced to ignorance of this oft-repeated saying. To be "well bought" does not only mean to secure a parcel of goods at a favorable price, as compared with the intrinsic market value, but really conveys a great deal more than that. It means that they are bought just at the proper moment in the right season to secure good condition and freshness—that they are just the description and quality to suit the buyer's particular trade, and further—that they are bought in quantities suitable to his trade requirements, sufficient to meet all probable demand without at the same time leaving a surplus to be jobbed off, thus slaughtering the advantage gained in buying.

To accomplish this the storekeeper must consider it necessary to acquire all possible knowledge of the conditions surrounding his business. The retail merchant should be the man of information on every point of interest in his district; by this means he is enabled to know when to buy the many luxuries of life which a populace will be inclined to purchase when prospects are animated, or to introduce new articles to take the place of others which are declining or falling into disfavor; to know when and how to stock up the plain necessities of life which the public must purchase even though the district may be in a state of depression.

Thus far as regards his local knowledge; next follows the importance of knowing "where to buy," and a great deal depends upon the buyer's knowledge of this point. Every commercial man who calls upon him will claim to have the best supply of goods in his particular industry but the buyer must necessarily use a good deal of judgment and discrimination in placing his orders. If he has a very large outlet for a certain article he will probably find it to his advantage to go as near as possible to the "fountain head" for his supply, to save the expense of unnecessary handling, whereas if his demand is only a small one it is not unlikely that he could make better terms with a wholesale dealer. A wholesale dealer often by his large aggregate buying secures an advantage from the manufacturer which it would not be possible to give to the retailer. Moreover, the wholesale dealer can frequently supply the retailer on terms which the manufacturer could not for a moment entertain.

It must not be forgotten that wholesale buying evolves largely on the question of financial manipulation and does not of necessity mean adding a large amount of profit to the original manufacturer's price. Again, the retailer has a much better variety and assortment from a wholesale house than he could possibly get from the manufacturer, and he will often find it to his advantage to spend a few days once or twice a year visiting the various markets, by that means becoming more individually in touch with the working details of the various market prices and gaining a measure of knowledge difficult to obtain under any other conditions. There are, however, a great number of storekeepers to whom a journey from their local district is practically an impossibility. To these men a very excellent means is provided by the various newspapers and journals who take up the many details peculiar to the storekeeper's needs. By reading regularly those papers which deal with his particular lines he can keep in touch as thoroughly with the market fluctuations, and receive as up-to-date information on all points connected with his business, as if he were really at the various markets. "Where to buy" will thus become a much easier proposition.

Another point of great importance to the retailer is to avoid altogether "speculative buying." This is particularly necessary in the case of small buyers. Speculative buying on the part of small traders is much to be condemned, and in most cases leads to disaster. The great thing a small storekeeper should study is the constant turning over of stock which he carries, as by this means alone can complete freshness of goods be secured. The trader may occasionally lose the advantage of a slight movement in the market by adhering strictly to this rule, but the ultimate advantage of having an absolutely fresh and saleable stock outweighs by a good deal the uncertain profit of buying goods in a speculative way. At the same time, there are times and seasons when a grocer can with advantage buy more freely than usual, and with a certainty of being able to increase his sales by the extra advantage that he can thus offer his customers. This subject, therefore, must be taken up entirely in connection with the individual conditions of the store and the grocer's own capacity for controlling his customers.

A point of primary importance to the storekeeper is the "deterioration" of his stock. A successful merchant must of necessity watch his stock that no particular lines are allowed to fall into the background. Any decline in the sale of any particular article should be at once noted and efforts made at once to relieve the stock on hand. The public has grown to a large extent to know pretty well its own requirements and in this connection a storekeeper will always find that "the first loss is the best." If it is necessary to job off a given line, do so immediately it becomes necessary, and before the goods become shopworn and out of date.

Another important factor in storekeepers' buying is the question of "seasons." Care should be taken that as the season closes, so its particular stock decreases, so that on its closing that stock has been well nigh sold out, leaving room for the approaching new season. By this means the locking up of capital is diminished and a storekeeper will be able to keep his banking account well ahead instead of having his capital on his shelves. This is an important point for the retailer who wishes to succeed. Wholesalers are keen to discriminate between the "slow" and the "ready" payer and a little care in regulating the stock in the way indicated will go a long way towards keeping a floating capital, bringing profit to the trader, and maintaining good standing with his wholesaler.

A point which is often overlooked is the necessity for the trader doing his own buying. A storekeeper may have a good man in his employ in whom he has implicit confidence, still it is not wise to allow such a man, however good, the power to send orders for goods simply because the stock has run out. A storekeeper is anxious to get the best terms and the closest prices, and he can only secure this by keeping in close touch with his requirements, and letting the wholesaler know that every order he sends is the work of his personal scrutiny, and that invoices are severely criticized by himself. By this means he will secure the best attention from his wholesaler and he in his turn will be careful to place such a buyer on bottom prices.

A point which often crops up in a country district is the question of "combined buying." This is greatly to be desired wherever possible. Local storekeepers by keeping thoroughly in touch with one another develop a friendly feeling born of mutual interests, and a measure of care is then exercised to bring into the district a volume of goods which whilst being sufficient for the purpose will not be an overstock, besides which the combined buying enables the dealers to obtain their goods on such favorable conditions that they can place them on the respective markets at a moderate figure and at the same time secure adequate remuneration to themselves.

TOBACCOS, CIGARS AND ACCESSORIES

THE TOBACCO DEPARTMENT.

IS the tobacco department of the grocery store declining? Such a question requires some answering and cannot be explained by monosyllables. It is something like the question which a much harassed witness once asked the illustrious Sir Charles Bradlaugh. The aggressive lawyer was cross-examining a hard-to-handle witness and finally said, "Come, now, brace up and answer me yes or no."

To this the witness replied "Can you answer me 'yes' or 'no' to any question that I may ask you without committing yourself?"

"Certainly," was the curt reply of the lawyer. "Ask me anything you please."

The witness simply asked, "Have you stopped beating your wife?"

Grocers should at least pay more attention to their tobacco department. There are many reasons why, outside of the money-making element which is a powerful factor. Tobacco is a very sensitive plant and even in its manufactured form will impart and attract peculiar odors readily. As a rule what sort of a department does the average grocer make? He has a few boxes of plug tobacco, chewing and smoking, and these are set up on a counter shelf with the lids of the boxes removed and the sides also partially taken off, making it handy to remove the plugs as they are required. Probably in the next department of his shelves there may be candies and all kinds of little grocer's sundries like gum and novelties usually classed in the luxury column of purchases. Butter and cheese are very often not far away and these commodities are also very sensitive, and then bread and flour, also sugar and other of the innumerable eatables that stock a grocery shop.

The stock of cigars is usually very limited and as a rule (not always by any means) are thrown carelessly into an old-time show case that might have been fashionable when Julius Caesar was on earth. The cigars are permitted to get dry and some fine evening when some young man takes an expensive notion, or there may be a function of some kind such as a political or other banquet, the grocer is called upon to serve cigars and he is absolutely unable to cope with the best chance he had for months of making what is called a "hit" in the community.

The moral attached to this is to be up-to-date. Your neighbor, the barber, will outdo you in the tobacco business as sure as fate if you drift the slightest bit. Ask some of the enterprising tobacco manufacturers to make you a gift of a nice zinc lined show case and see that it is used for tobacco purposes only. Numbers of tobacco manufacturers are giving such things to druggists and they would be glad to give them to grocers if they could be assured of some concentrated effort on the part of the grocer to make a push on the lines that should attract. It would be wise also to have cigar cutters in the shop; get some small boxes of matches made with your name on them and give them out to your plug smokers if there are not many cigar men coming along. Now is the time to spurt for Christmas trade. Be alive and get in some novelties in the way of smokers' sets, tobacco jars, pipe racks, nice cigar holders and trays for smokers' tables, etc. Lay out to have some fine rubber pouches and some novel match boxes, all of which will go a long way towards stamping you as a leading grocer and one who looks well after the up-to-date.

An idea is abroad among certain grocers that if they kept a fine cigar place, the average farmer who was running a big account with them would expect them to throw in a box of cigars every time he paid his bill, which might be at the end of every six months. That is certainly all nonsense. The average farmer, perhaps, would not like his thrifty wife to see marked down in his account "two boxes of cigars." etc. She would think they were on the high road to ruin. But the farmer and his sons could easily have the bill rendered to them personally or if necessary he could justify the expenditure and argue it out with his wife and daughters as compared with the perfume, fancy soap and immense quantities of fancy teas which the women usually champion. At any rate the grocer can easily be the architect of his own tobacco department.

Another good point for the general storekeeper to remember is that the antediluvian comforts which usually surround these stores must be crossed off the map. Get rid of that keg of nails on which the past two generations have been loafing on close by that old-fashioned stove all winter long. The old yarn teller of the village would soon feel ill at ease if some nice, comfortable chairs were placed in the shop and some idea of cosiness added. The tobacco stores of the towns attract young men who have up-to-date ideas because they are up-to-date in equipment and management. A well-known preacher has said that as far as young men in the country are concerned, the general store can be frequently a source of great education to young men. Even taking for granted that he did not mean to apply this to the tobacco department, that is certainly one which has a most diverse variety of forces that would entertain and instruct.

A very strong plan for advertising tobaccos is the ash tray bearing on it your own name. Plenty of big manufacturers will make them for you and you may add to the inscription the line; "Blank's Leading Merchant," and then name the lines in which you are especially interested. All this could be done on a reasonably sized tray and the women at home would thank you a thousand times for supplying a repository for the husband and boy's burnt matches, pipe refuse and ashes. The great wealth distributors are the women and the way to boom up business generally is to please them.

Fine pipe cleaners are good ads, too, and should be kept in stock. They are usually sold at five cents a bunch and are invaluable to any home where the careless smoker usually tears strands out of the best broom in order to take the plugged tobacco out of the stem of the pipe.

There is as much ingenuity about making your tobacco department go as there is about the driving of the most strikingly utilitarian branch of the big grocer's or general merchant's business.

It seems especially discouraging to find manufacturers such as those who have their announcements running regularly in The Grocer see the amount of disregard which the grocer pays to his tobacco department. Be fair and make money.

CARE OF CIGARS.

Havana cigars should be kept in the boxes till used, and if possible at a temperature of about 65 degrees above zero. A good Havana cigar is a delicate article. The leaves will take up moisture like a sponge and will absorb any impure air or bad smell. They evaporate as quickly as they absorb, and if the box is left opened and exposed to extremes of heat or cold, moisture or dryness, the cigars are ruined.

The expert smokes his cigar slowly, puffing away at it to produce a perfect combustion so as not to lose the delicate aroma. The man who would puff furiously at a Havana cigar is as foolish as he who would gulp down a fine old wine or fail to sip slowly the brewing of the choicest teas.

CUBA AND ITS TOBACCO.

UNDOUBTEDLY the origin of tobacco lies in obscurity. The earliest records the civilized world has of its use are connected with Columbus and his notable first voyage across the ocean. Strange to say, however, it is still the districts peculiar to its discovery which are to-day the great leading centres of its cultivation and it would seem as though America and Cuba in particular have nothing to fear from the rest of the world as regards tobacco growing.

There are various parts of the world peculiarly adapted to certain productions. For instance, there is a part of France which yields the best grades of champagne; there is a pocket of soil along the Rhine from which comes wine which sells at $10 per bottle. These and other places which might be mentioned, notwithstanding other districts producing other lines of a similar character and possibly at much less price, continue to maintain their supremacy and apparently they ever will. Undoubtedly it is by combinations of soil and climate that these results are obtained and that combination is such that man cannot imitate it.

It is the same with tobacco. There is a region in the Province of Pia del Rio in the western district of the Island of Cuba which lies on the sunny side of the mountain range and the soil is such that it cannot be imitated. Samples of this soil have been taken from time to time by agricultural departments but so far they have failed to produce a similar soil anywhere else. The country has been prospected just like a mining region and all the best soil beds are now known and are practically all under cultivation for tobacco.

Havana tobacco costs so much to raise and manufacture into cigars that it cannot be sold more cheaply than it is. It is safe to say that one cannot buy a real Havana cigar anywhere in America for less than fifteen cents, yet all the highest grades, and consequently high-priced cigars find their outlet in the British market where all high-grade goods are readily placed. It is a remarkable feature that out of the 200,000,000 lbs. of high grade tobacco manufactured in Cuba less than one-twentieth part finds its way into the American market.

An interesting feature is that quite a quantity of the crop grown in Cuba is grown under canvas, the reason given for this being that the color may be preserved in its integrity. The soft shade under canvas protects the plants and gives them a beautiful light-colored leaf. The color is caused by the sun; a dark leaf, therefore, simply means one that is sun-burnt. Many suppose that dark-colored cigars are of a stronger flavor than light-colored, but this is not necessarily the case—it is simply an idea originating with fashion. The shade does not change the flavor or of necessity the color of the tobacco. It serves as a protection, however, and the plants are less likely to be injured by insects or winds. The industry is altogether one calling for skill and long experience and if these qualities are lacking it is practically impossible to grow tobacco successfully.

It is further a venture which calls for a large amount of invested capital. A few inquiries into the cost of tobacco farming revealed the remarkable cost of production. It was found that many farmers spent as much as $500 per acre for manure, fertilizers, and canvas. It will also cost from $200 to $300 to roof in an acre with mosquito netting, an absolute necessity for success, and in the neighborhood of Havana it was nothing to find $200 worth of manure used annually. In the neighborhood of Vuelta Abajo it costs about $8,000 a year to run a tobacco farm of 33 acres and market the crop. A satisfactory feature, however, as a set-off against this, is the fact that in the event of a good crop the net profit yielded would be from $2,000 to $3,000 and has been known to be considerably beyond that.

A curious circumstance took place at the time when a new railway was being laid through the Cuban tobacco districts. When this was planned it was found almost impossible to obtain right of way. The farmers would not give up the tobacco lands, but one of them agreed to allow the railway to cross his farm on the payment of a good round sum and a stipulation that he should remove the soil to the depth of one foot of the part crossed by the railroad, and this was agreed to, the farmer considering the first soil of great value. The tobacco soil is shallow but its constitution is such that with proper treatment it continues to produce year after year.

THIS IS FOR YOU

Our Decorated Opal Business is a big one, because our product is not excelled in the world, but we want to cover a still wider range. To introduce the line to every possible handler we have made up our "Canadian Grocer Assortment," consisting of one dozen each of the twelve articles illustrated above. The goods are of pure white opal glass, brilliantly decorated in hand-painted floral designs. The price (F.O.B. Toronto) for the gross is $9.00, with an extra charge of 40c. for package. The smallest "cross-roads" grocery store in the country can use this lot, and the largest departmental stores cannot buy cheaper anywhere. There is no discount from this price for one gross or fifty gross. Merchants who have never handled our line should get this sample lot quick ; merchants who have bought before will recognize the value and order at once.

CHINA, GLASSWARE AND CROCKERY

A "CUT GLASS" WARNING.

A DEPARTMENT which up to the present time has not received the full attention which it merits and which both its use and utility deserves is that of the "China and Glass" department of the grocery store.

We have often dealt with the process of manufacture of these articles; we need not, therefore, detail to our readers the manufacture, the beauty, or the selling qualities of cut glass. Nothing has as quickly found its way into the public favor.

Oval Sugar Basin.

Footed Comport.

Just think a moment. How much cut glass was there in your neighborhood three or four years ago? How much is in use to-day? All this is clear and evident.

At the present, however, it lies in our province as an up-to-date journal to give a warning voice to our readers about the practice which whilst obtaining at present only in the United States is likely at any moment to invade Canada.

An imitation of the genuine article is being made and placed upon the market with the attempt to pass it off as "genuine cut" glass.

The process consists in producing a "pressed blank" in which a pattern has already been moulded and is to a large extent practically finished. By passing this "blank" through the process of finishing similar to that prevailing with "genuine cut" glass a good imitation is obtained. The saving of labor may be readily imagined when bearing in mind that all "real cut" glass is made from "plain blanks," on which the pattern is first "marked" by hand lines and then "cut," "smoothed" and "polished." The two first of these operations are avoided by the use of the "pressed blank," but at the expense of the quality, which is really THE feature of genuine cut glass.

A piece of glass "moulded" into a pattern, no matter how "smoothed" or "polished" afterward, cannot compare with the clear, beautiful "cross-grain"—if it may be so called—and sparkling brilliancy of the genuine article.

A piece of "pressed glass" (which is an every day article of commerce) of the highest finish and in closest imitation possible of cut glass patterns, but making no claim to be anything but what it is, is ALL RIGHT, but a piece of so-called cut glass made from a "pressed moulded blank," and practically half pressed, is ALL WRONG, and no better than a fraud upon the public, who are deceived by its resemblance to the real cut article.

It is all very well to say that the customer cannot distinguish between the two, which unfortunately, on account of the poor quality of the "blanks" used by some manufacturers, is perhaps true in some cases, but customers find out in the end the deception practised upon them, and the RIGHT WAY, the SAFE WAY, the SURE WAY for the grocer is to buy only the genuine article, making particular inquiries as to whether the goods he purchases are made from a "pressed blank" or from the usual "plain blank."

Japanese Marmalade Jar.

By using caution like this alone can he be sure of obtaining the genuine article. This form of imitation in glassware has only just shown signs of invading the Canadian market and our readers would do well to be on the alert so that they will not be deceived into buying "cut pressed glassware," really thinking they are obtaining the genuine "cut glass" goods.

USEFUL AND ORNAMENTAL.

THE modern housekeeper's pride and pleasure is her table service. To have a table laid out in an elegant though delicate style is one of the great ambitions of the housewife of to-day. To accomplish this it is nearly safe to say that the real cut glass table ware is the ideal ware for the purpose.

Many housewives, however, are unable to afford this luxury and in order to meet this circumstance makers of glassware have placed on the market from time to time lines of moulded glass which have more or less received public favor. The manufacture of this moulded glass has now reached a great height of perfection and housewives of moderate means can obtain a good line of glassware which will have much of the superior finish, artistic design, and brilliancy of color which is such a familiar feature of the genuine cut glass.

Many owners of expensive cut glass often use it only occasionally for fear of getting it broken or destroyed. Several lines of moulded glass are now on the market under registered names, such as "Pres-cut," "Near-cut," etc., which come in admirably in these cases of need. Besides being nearly equal in appearance to the genuine cut glass it has the additional quality of being much stronger in texture and is just the very line for the grocer to push. It is an attractive, good selling line of table glassware and shows a good margin of profit. We are showing herewith cuts of several articles made in these styles and which are ready sellers in a general store.

Passing from this we come to the more practical side of novelties and which whilst offering a special inducement at the present season are also of material interest to the grocer the whole year through.

Never before have we seen such fine display as is being offered of useful and artistic china and glass novelties, which can be had at prices which should prove attractive to even the smallest country store.

One prominent centrepiece which is fast gaining favor is the old time favorite epergne. They have come into the market in a great variety of attractive forms and naturally vary in price from the simple one-standard to the most elaborate designs and with many branches.

There is also on this season's market a most attractive display of Japanese chinaware of very elegant designs and colors. The Japanese have thrown themselves open for this market and are rapidly becoming keen competitors with German lines. Their work is better and much more daintily finished, bearing comparison with almost any other market. It looks as though in a short space of time the Japanese will rule this market not only as regards price but as regards the quality of thier goods. A good line which has just reached the Canadian market from Japan is a sample of "blue willow ware" on much the same lines as the old-fashioned "willow goods" so familiar a decade ago.

Wedgewood Plate.

SOME NEW PIECES.

WHAT could possibly be better for the coming Christmas trade than a bright sparkling assortment of glassware similar to those shown in the following cuts? The grocer would do well to order up an assortment of these "pres-cut" lines.

A very fine trade is being done in "Wedgewood Rail Plates" and these are making great headway for presentation purposes. They form a select decoration giving a daintiness and elegance peculiar to this class of decoration, a select line for a grocer to cultivate for his staple trade. In "Japanware" some very fine effects are being produced. The colors are perfection, and the highest point has been reached in their effective elegance. There is no doubt that these goods will secure a vast trade throughout the Dominion, for besides being useful and ornamental they are being placed on the market at prices which bring them within the reach of the general public.

The accompanying cut represents the ruling "Epergne" line which is fast coming into favor as useful and elegant presents for the Christmas trade.

Another article to which we would draw the storekeeper's particular attention is the "Wire Easel and Display Rack." Every grocer has spent a good deal of trouble in devising a simple means for the display of his glassware and often a good deal of expense has been incurred by loss through breakage. By the use of these handy and inexpensive little contrivances, all this trouble, annoyance, and expense can be avoided. We give herewith a cut showing a cup, saucer, and plate standing in one of these neat little folders. The utility of this invention will be readily seen. Not only does it greatly facilitate the display of the goods, but they can be dusted and shown with little fear of breakage.

CHRISTMAS GOODS AND NOVELTIES

CULTIVATE CHRISTMAS NOVELTIES.

PROBABLY at no time of the year is such an attractive opportunity offered to the enterprising and up-to-date storekeeper as is now offered him by the season which is dawning upon us.

Every one looks forward to the approach of Christmas in a free and open manner. It is a time when friend meets friend not merely with a handshake but with an open heart and free hand. They are longing to express their goodwill in the form of a suitable presentation. The storekeeper welcomes this with a smiling face as he sees in it not only the joyful good nature portrayed on every countenance, but underneath that far more important interests which are likely to spell dollars and cents to his banking account.

"Now" is the moment for the storekeeper to look ahead to the eventful time—indeed it is a duty which he owes to his many customers—to have provided for them, ready to hand, as indescribable an array of useful, artistic entertaining presentations and gifts, as is made possible by the ingenuity of the inventor, and skill of the manufacturer.

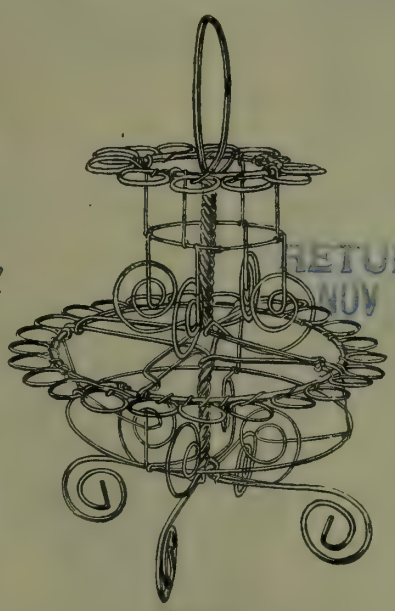
Probably the first thing that presents itself to the dealer is the claim of the "Little Folks." Children are critics and critics of no mean order. They are keen to note anything novel or attractive, and the way to get the best out of it. The dealer must, therefore, see to it that he disappoint them not, but that he has the wherewith to satisfy them.

Paper Festooning.

A present for the children which is at once not only attractive but a good source of general entertainment is the musical toy, a sketch of which we give herewith. This can be had in many forms, the favorite one being in the form of a little doll acrobat who performs her evolutions to the musical strains of the instrument. Another musical arrangement which we also give herewith is a musical stand for the Christmas tree, fitted with several well-known tunes which break in with happy sweetness as the children play around. This stand will play its tunes for several hours, and would be an excellent advertisement in the store if used for display.

Parrot—Tissue Paper Ornament.

Model Turbine Engine.



Pipe Rack.

Red Bell—Tissue Paper Ornament.

Many are the novelties which are being offered by the leading houses in this way, which should be a source of attraction to the enterprising grocer, but we can only enumerate a very few by way of introduction. A favorite toy this season is the fire brigade got up with every description of display. Then there is the new game of "Togo," the idea of which is the outcome of the Russo-Japanese War. There is also the mechanical engine, a perfect model of a real portable engine, and which is made to work many devices which are in themselves imitations of many real things in everyday life, such as an elevator, a mill, a pump, a fountain, etc.

Passing from this there is another line of peculiar interest to the grocer, and that is the multiplicity of presents adapted to the smoker's interests, and which come at a specially advantageous figure. There is the old-time "Large Cherry House Pipe," ever a favorite for the Winter fireside, and the leather case "Pipe Companion," an ever-ready present. "Tobacco pouches" of a variety of descriptions, and these goods not only as Christmas novelties but as all-the-year trade, can be made specially attractive features for the coming season.

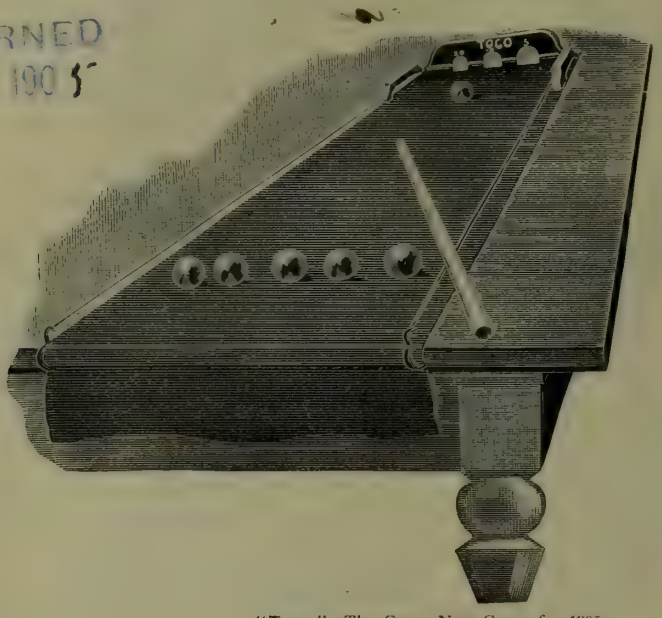
A further strikingly useful present which is very much in evidence is the "Typewriter" toy, which is, in addition, also an article of utility, and not only will it provide entertainment for the "youngsters," but can be used profitably for actual letter writing.

Then there is the toy "Sewing Machine," which this year has reached such developments as to become an article for the "little miss" whereby she can take an active part in helping mother.

Neither time nor space will allow for the many new, attractive and useful novelties which have arrived this season, but we feel we cannot press too strongly the great interest there is to the grocer in this subject of Christmas novelties. He should by no means leave these many lines out of his calculations, but should endeavor to make his store attractive to every claim his customers are likely to make. In this way he will not only be a means of serving his customers but also will have an opportunity to substantially add to his own gain.

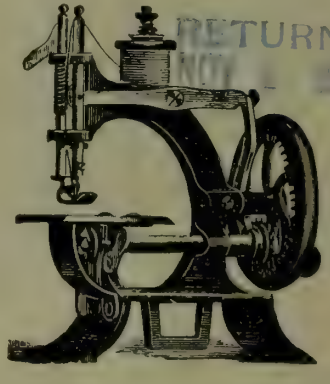


"Togo"—The Great New Game for 1905.

DECORATION AND DISPLAY.

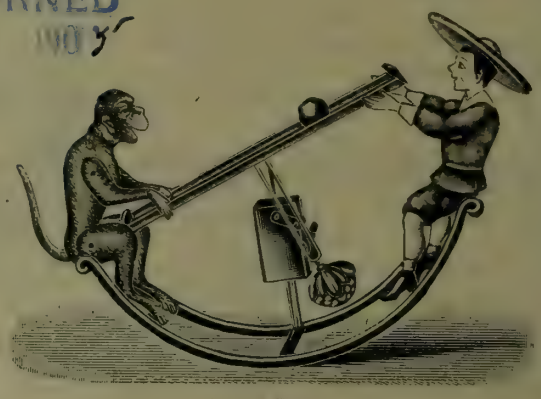
A FEATURE which we would like to press upon the grocer in view of the coming season of Christmas is the importance of giving great attention to the decoration, and the display of Christmas novelties and effects.

The grocer is far too apt to place too little importance on these features of his store, whereas in reality the tasty and attractive decoration of his store would be in a large measure conducive to the sale of his general stock. The grocer should by no means look upon the novelty trade as a side line, for as a matter of fact many of the common articles in use to-day were originally introduced as novelties and have since become regular articles of commerce.



In this connection we would draw attention to the remarkable perfection to which the fancy paper decorations have been brought. We give herewith two or three cuts of what can be produced in these very cheap decorations. The festooning is so arranged as to be capable of being folded up into a very small space, and after having been used can be taken down and put away again for future use. The effect of this festooning is remarkably good, and is really an economical method of decorating the store, as it can be used many times over.

There are also fancy hangings of any and every description and color. The grocer would also do well to lay in a stock of these goods for sale. If he were to decorate his store at a very early date in view of Christmas there is no doubt that he would find plenty of room for the sale of these decorations. His own store would be a demonstration of their beauty and effect, and a fine advertisement for the sale of them.



Rocker Teeter.

There are many other details which will, of course, present themselves to the active mind, but this is one which would not only make the store attractive but would at once become a profitable investment.

The cut of the pipe rack given herewith is a very fine means for store show. It is inexpensive and when filled with an assorted variety of pipes forms a great attraction and a great incentive to trade.

THE ART OF CANNING AND PRESERVING

At no very distant date it was the custom of every housewife to consider canning and preserving as forming part of the regular duties of the household. Since those days quite an evolution has taken place in these matters. "Preserving time" is now no longer an epoch in domestic history. Instead of making her own pickles, jams, etc., the twentieth century housewife buys them at her store. The industrious housewife will of curse put up a small stock on her own account in order to have some real home-made for special and select occasions, but with modern methods and scientific knowldge the manufacture of these goods has been brought to such a state of perfection that it is no longer considered necessary to place preserving and canning among the many household duties.

Science now-a-days has a way of doing things much better than by the old style methods, and machinery is so much cheaper than the old hand processes that it can be considered scarcely worth while to toil hour after hour, when the same goods can be bought ready to hand and perfectly manufactured. The enormous strides that the canning industry has made during recent years is most remarkable; for instance, take the United States as an illustration. In 1890 it was estimated that there were less than 1,000 factories engaged in this industry. At the present time it is considered that there must be at least some three thousand establishments with an estimated output of not less than $100,000,000 per annum.

Like many other modern day conveniences the art of canning was started on its present road to perfection, more by emergency and need than by distinct set purpose, and can probably be traced in its development to any large extent to the Napoleonic Wars, when the need for preserving fruits for a long sea voyage became a distinct necessity, and the absence of any such method caused considerable inconvenience. Previous experiments by scientists having established the fact that the decomposition of fruit was caused by a living organism, the French military authorities offered a reward to any one who could introduce a method whereby food of any description could be preserved for use at a future date. This brought forth a treatise by one Nicholas Appert, discussing a means of killing this organism or otherwise precluding its presence. His method was simply to enclose fruit in a glass jar which was then corked and subjected to the action of boiling water.

The principle of Appert's method has been proved by time and experience to be correct, and is that on which all canning and preserving has since been done. It is interesting therefore to read his own words on the subject. He wrote as follows: "It is obvious that this new method of preserving animal and vegetable substances proceeds from the simple principle of applying heat in a due degree to the several substances after having deprived them as much as possible of all contact with the external air. It might, on a first view of the subject, be thought that a substance, either raw or previously acted upon by fire, and afterward put into hot bottles, might if a vaccum were made in those bottles and they were completely corked, be preserved equally well with the application of heat in the water bath. This would be an error, for all trials I have made convince me that the absolute privation of the external air (the internal air being rendered of no effect by the action of the heat), and the application of heat by the water bath, are both indispensable to the complete preservation of the alimentary substances.

For a long time glass jars were used for preserving fruits and vegetables of every description, but they have been gradually abandoned in favor of cans, as it was found that they did not resist effectually the extremes of temperature, and further, they were found costly compared with the cans, and much more expensive in transport. Crockery and glass, however, are still much in favor for the preservation of certain kinds of fruits and vegetables and especially among the choicest grades of preserved goods. The objections which are sometimes urged against the use of tin are based on the supposition that the natural acid of the fruit or vegetable itself acts upon it producing a form of metallic salt or compound, injurious to health. This has been found after careful investigation to be groundless, especially when a good quality article was used. In order to more effectually obliterate the possibility of such a chemical process, an ingenious contrivance has been introduced in the form of a parchment lining or some such similar material, which is impervious to any of the liquid which exudes from the preserved comestible. This prevents the article in the can from coming into contact with the tin at any time. The use of linings of this kind has long been recognized as a solution of the problem of the prevention of ptomaine poisoning.

The early manufacture of tin cans for preserving purposes was very crude, the bodies of the tins being simply cut with shears, and the side seam made with a plumb joint and then soldered together, the heads being soldered on in a very primitive manner. Now, tin cans are made by labor-saving devices by which the cost has been enormously reduced and all the parts made are put together by mechanical contrivances.

With regard to output, each establishment has its own distinctive quality, and the maintaining of a uniform character of goods requires a strict adherence to recipes for ingredients, and to rules for packing. All bottles of mixed pickles, for instance, the product of any particular factory, are uniform in number, arrangement and color of contents.

Pickles and whole fruits are usually put in the bottles by hand, but catsups baked beans, peas, etc., are handled by machinery. A catsup bottling machine is quite a perfect piece of mechanism. A silver lined pipe leads the prepared mixture from a large reservoir above and allows it to run into the bottles in a continuous stream as they pass beneath its mouth. From fifteen to twenty are filled at a time. As the bottles are filled they are corked by machinery, and then placed by an operator in a conveyor, which passes them along to a "capper" who dips them in melted wax, and places a tinfoil cap on each. The conveyor then carries them through a sheet iron tunnel, where they are washed by jets of water which shower them on every side. They are then ready for labelling.

Cans for baked beans are filled in a similar manner, the proper amount of tomato sauce being put in by machines through silver lined tubes while the cans are on the conveyor. Caps are placed on each can by hand, and the train bearing the filled cans then passes through a sealing machine, where they are heated by small gas fires underneath. There they are soldered, twelve at a time. Then they are conveyed to a washing machine, where they are washed and cooled, and afterward stacked in iron baskets. The latter are then lifted by pneumatic cranes and placed in large retorts. After being hermetically sealed, they are subjected for a considerable length of time to live steam under great pressure, by the action of which they are thoroughly sterilized.

The cooking of fruits for canning is now done in large copper kettles, having a steam jacket surrounding the lower half, which insures an even degree of heat. Any desired temperature can be obtained and the heat regulated to meet requirements. Formerly the method of cooking was in open kettles, and the highest temperature obtainable was 212 degrees F., the tmperature of boiling water. A little later a higher degree of temperature was secured by the addition of common salt to the water, and this was followed by the use of chloride of calcium, by which a possible temperature of 240 degrees was obtained. Under this process, however, the cans became discolored, involving considerable expense in cleaning them. A closed process kettle to cook the goods by superheating water with steam was shortly afterwards invented, and next came the present style of kettle and dry steam.

The canning of corn is so extensive an industry that it deserves description by itself, apart from that of other vegetables. System has now been introduced to such an extent that the canning companies make annual contracts with large farmers for their yearly yield of marketable corn. These contracts are signed at the expiration of one season's business for the next year's growth. Then, as soon as the corn crop commences to mature the canners send representatives, known as field men, to make an inspection. Each field man watches the crop within a given area, and offers personal advice to each farmer in his territory as to when it should be gathered. Strange as it may seem, a lapse of even three days in the harvesting of this yield may make an important difference in the quality of the corn. If allowed to grow beyond its point of greatest succulence, it becomes tough and dry.

The work of canning corn is done almost wholly by machinery, in which many improvements have been introduced within the past two years. Formerly the corn was cut from the cob by hand, the grains then being placed in the can in a raw condition. After cooking for some time in the can, the latter was punctured to permit the escape of the steam, and after resealing was given another boiling. Now the corn is partly cooked first and then is put into the can while hot, the final cooking being given in a retort or steam bath.

A MODERN FRUIT FARM.

THERE are few prospects more pleasing than that off the mountain between Hamilton and Grimsby, with the blue waters of Lake Ontario in the distance, the north shore just visible on a clear day, while beneath you stretching down to the lake side in long battalions lie the famous orchards of the Niagara peninsula.

In the midst of this "Garden of the Lord" are situated the Helderleigh Fruit Farms and Nurseries of E. D. Smith. In the midst of this model farm Mr. Smith has placed his preserving factory, a view of which is given in the accompanying cut.

The factory is of brick, built on a cement foundation 100 feet by 40 feet, with three storeys and a basement. There is also a wing 40 feet by 50 feet in which is located the boiler. The H. G. & B. Electric Railway runs right by the door and serves the factory with the fruit of the district almost as soon as it is picked.

Mr. Smith started in with a determination to put up nothing but absolutely pure and unadulterated goods, and has put on the market a very handsome line of goods in glass, as well as in seven, fourteen and twenty-eight pound pails.

A WELL LIGHTED STORE.

The poorly lighted store is beginning to be the exception. Merchants are evidently realizing more than ever before the improvement which is made in the store's appearance by the installation of an up-to-date lighting system. The improvements in this line which have been made during recent years, make an up-to-date lighting system a good investment for any merchant who has been using old-fashioned methods to light his store.

A String of Winners

The grocer who starts into the Fall trade with his shelves and storehouse well supplied with first quality canned goods will win out before Spring against his competitor who has been content with ordinary goods.

The housewife soon finds what brands she can depend on and tells her neighbors, and trade grows apace, not alone in canned goods, but in general lines as well.

That is The Secret of Our Success

We appreciated the rights of the consumer, and in our OLD HOMESTEAD BRAND have put on the market positively the finest canned goods ever offered the trade in Canada. The consumer did the rest. Here are a few leaders:

OLD HOMESTEAD CORN
OLD HOMESTEAD PEAS
OLD HOMESTEAD TOMATOES
OLD HOMESTEAD BEANS
OLD HOMESTEAD STRAWBERRIES
OLD HOMESTEAD RASPBERRIES

They're spic and span in every particular. Even the labels are enough to persuade a customer to try them. A trial always means a repeat order.

You should certainly put in stock the OLD HOMESTEAD BRAND. Ask your wholesaler to send you a few cases as a starter. If he can't supply you, write us direct.

ADVICE FOR THE PROGRESSIVE CLERK

HINTS FOR THE YOUNG CLERKS.

THERE is a kind of notion abroad which unfortunately to some extent has laid hold of the grocery trades, that anyone can run a store, that neither education, nor technical training, is necessary to effect sales.

There is little question but that this lack of knowledge is the primary cause of the failures of so many storekeepers. The ordinary mechanic is expected to serve some time at least in the educationary process. The bookkeeper, the accountant, and the lawyer are all expected to go through a course of training before being considered qualified to follow their respective callings, but the storekeeper is considered as outside such categories and the idea has grown of late that ignorance is no barrier to his success.

It would be well for the young store-clerk to at once dispel from his mind any such thought. Although the day for a lengthy apprenticeship to the grocery trade has no doubt passed, the many methods of having to deal with staple goods in their natural state having fallen into disuse, owing to the introduction of advanced and scientific methods still the fact is, that one class of knowledge has only given place to another. The time is fast approaching when it will be necessary for the grocery clerk to be intimately acquainted with the goods which he handles, not merely as to commercial knowledge, but as to their technical and scientific character.

The storekeeper occupies the position of the true "Middleman," the public have little knowledge beyond him, and the storekeeper who sets himself to become completely master of the position which he occupies, is the one who will ultimately gain the confidence of his clients, and the supreme place in his business.

To the young clerk just starting in his business there is one characteristic that should be invariably present and that is "neatness" in his personal appearance. Nothing strikes a customer on entering a store like the personal appearance of the attendants in it, and the customer naturally, at once expects the store to take character from the attendant who approaches them. A neat and tidy clerk invariably means a neat and tidy store. To cultivate neatness in his person soon develops a character of tidiness which follows every act.

The next point of importance for the young clerk to study is his "manner" of handling the goods. He should cultivate a graceful, almost fastidious manner of touching and handling the goods with his customers. A careful gentlemanly manner in this regard goes a considerable way towards impressing the purchaser with the importance of the particular article he is selling to them. He should never attempt to touch any of the loose produce with his fingers, but carefully avoid doing so. The proper tools should be used on such occasions. Customers to the store would soon be impressed by a little care of this sort and would themselves abstain from the practice which, alas, is so sommon, of taking up and examining in a careless way any loose staples which may be about.

Another important feature and one which cannot be too strenuously insisted upon, is that of "order." "A place for everything and everything in its place." Nothing is more annoying to a customer than to have to stand by while a search is being made for the article required. Everything should be kept in regular order, This, no doubt, causes a good deal of regular supervision and necessitates constant care, but its importance cannot be over-estimated, not only with regard to importance to the customer, but also, from a point of economy and saving of expense. An instance of this came recently to light in a certain store in which an article commanding only a very small sale was relegated to an unimportant place in the rear of the store. It, however, sometime afterwards became a ready seller and a great amount of time was lost by the salesmen having to travel backwards and forwards whenever it was wanted. A new clerk who had just entered the store, noticed this inconvenience and suggested placing sufficient stock for immediate requirements in a handy position. The amount of time thus saved meant a good deal of momentary value to his employer.

Another feature of no less importance is that of "promptitude." Few customers really come to purchase until they are actually in need of the goods themselves. Promptitude, therefore, in dealing with his business is of the first importance and the young grocery clerk should cultivate from the outset to be prompt in all his actions. "Do it now" is the motto which is being adopted by the up-to-date business men. Nothing should be adjourned till to-morrow which could possibly be finished to-day, even though it may mean remaining at one's post a few additional hours occasionally. By this means a spirit of promptitude is cultivated in every act of the clerk which will ultimately tell in minimizing the amount of work which he has to accomplish. If from the moment of rising in the morning he sets himself to be at his post immediately on time to commence his routine according to a given order, and to complete each duty before taking on his next, he will soon find that his duties are performed with an ease and regularity which will make business a pleasure instead of a drudgery. This principle of promptitude should be in evidence when dealing with customer's orders. Never promise delivery of goods unless the certainty of carrying out that promise is assured. Nothing is more annoying to a customer, or more detrimental to the reputation of a store, than for a customer to be disappointed in the delivery of an order. Once this occurs reputation is affected in such a way as to be very difficult of amendment.

"SUCCESS."

EVERYONE is anxious to succeed. One man expects to reach it one way, another man another way. Each has his particular ideal, but how few can really be classed as successful men. The kinds of men in the world to-day may probably be classed under two heads. Te man who sails, and the man who drifts. The one selects the port for which he intends to make and boldly sets his sails for that haven. He is not discouraged by either contrary wind or tide. He will use both to reach his destination and make both wind and tide servants to his will. He ultimately reaches his goal. The other man travels along drifting with the tide. He may travel a much greater distance and have much greater hardships and perils, but he is never sure at what port he will arrive. It may be "any port in a storm" and he will tell you that luck has been against him, or that he did not get a good start. The man who sails trusts to neither luck, fortune nor circumstances, he depends on himself and has his eye on his own special goal.

Some of the most prominent men before the world to-day have started life in a simple country store. Our own Premier, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, once said that he began life behind the counter of a modest store, and that he learnt there an insight into human nature, and the methods of adapting himself to meet the requirements of other people's temperaments, which had paved the way for the ultimate prominence of a public career. He had worked side by side with a conscientious Presbyterian and had learnt to respect the susceptibilities and points of conscience of his fellow men. His years of education in that simple country store life he would not be without under any consideration.

Mr. H. H. Rogers, known as the "King" of Standard oil, began life as a boy in a grocery store in his native town at the modest salary of one dollar per week and all found, and thus paved the way by his early experience in this country store for becoming one of the greatest "Merchant Princes" the world has ever known. Mr. Rogers once said that a man's success depended upon his similarity to the postage stamp. "Consider the postage stamp. Its success lies in its ability to stick to one thing until it gets there," and as a proof of the measure in which this principle governed him, his early conduct is significant. When as a grocer's boy he lost the top button of his coat, he would not allow his mother to sew a new one on until he had saved up a stated sum of money. Later on, when he had decided that his wages were not high enough, he made a vow that he would not get his hair cut until he had made himself of more value to his employer. He kept that vow until his hair reached his coat collar. His ability for "stick-to-itiveness" has proved itself in that he has become from a poor boy entering life at the veriest bottom rung of the ladder, a Wall street magnate worth $50,000,000, rising each morning $20,000 richer than when he went to bed.

It is well to remember that success of the real kind always springs from the man himself, and not from the condition of things around him. No man really becomes great by accident or chance. The successful man has really earned his success by hard work and energy.

The boy beginning life would do well to remember that what he sets his mind on, he will ultimately get. The mind is really the index of the man and the youth must abandon at once from his mind any idea of "luck" if he means to accomplish anything. There are few things he cannot get if he is willing to pay the price, and that price must be definiteness of purpose, and continued and unfailing perseverance. In this and this alone lies the secret of the marking out of fortune. Success or failure are not chosen for us, we choose them for ourselves.

THE NECESSITY OF KNOWLEDGE.

IT has been said that the greatest fault of the clerk is lack of consideration. From the viewpoint of the customer this may be a just criticism, though years of experience as a professional shopper have not shown that clerks are so different from other human beings in matters of politeness, consideration, attention, and kindred traits.

Gather a thousand people of any class together and you will find about nine hundred who have little consideration for other people under any circumstances. Placing the thousand people behind the counter of a great department store cannot change these figures. Often it is the fault of the customer if she receives rude treatment at the hands of a clerk, for even customers are trying sometimes.

There is another side to this question of the deficiencies of clerks which even he fails to realize in many cases.

The average clerk knows little about the goods he sells over the counter. It is this lack of knowledge of the goods he handles and the stock carried in the department which most frequently allows trade to slip through his fingers.

The sale of a bit of merchandise seems on its face a simple thing. It is summed up in a request from the customer, the filling out of a check by the clerk, wrapping and delivery of the parcel. Instead, however, of this being a complete transaction in itself, it is really the consummation of a transaction which has been pending for months and for which much time and many dollars have been spent.

These are days of large business and keen competition. The first thing which has to be considered is the buying of the stock of merchandise, and this means heavy expense, not only on account of the money invested but because competent buyers are scarce and demand good salaries. The goods must be well bought.

We will assume that each has done his work thoroughly up to this point—the merchandise has been carefully chosen, bought at a figure to insure good profit to the merchant and reasonable price to the customer; it has been advertised in a strong, interest-holding style, and displayed in a manner to support the advertisement. At this critical point the clerk steps in and meets the customer to finish the transaction. If he is competent, knows his business, and, above all, knows his stock everything will work out as planned; but let an incompetent clerk come in at this moment, and he will destroy every possibility of a sale that has been worked up by weeks of preparation. In five minutes he can do more harm to his employer's interests than can be remedied in as many years.

The clerk who wants to succeed—who wants to make himself conspicuously indispensable to his department—and who is ambitious to become a buyer—should train himself to know by sight and touch each grade of goods he handles.

He should look everywhere for information in regard to this line, not only in the advertising columns of his and other firms, but also in whatever printed matter comes to hand.

It is more often ignorance of the goods he handles than any other one thing that spoils the trade at this point. Get knowledge therefore.

DON'TS FROM EXPERIENCE.

Don't expect large things from a little minded man. Some folk are built on the penny scale and weigh that much only.

Don't laugh over others' mistakes. You may stumble soon.

Don't think you know it all, for you don't. One head can't hold a hogshead.

Don't look for oak trees out of acorns in a day or a year. It takes time to ripen both crop and character.

Don't judge a sermon by your ears.

OF INTEREST TO EVERY GROCER

Before you place your order for Canned Goods remember that the QUEEN BRAND stands for quality

BELLEVILLE CANNING CO.

Belleville, Ont.

There is a vast difference between a tickle and a truth.

Don't trust your feeling as proof of piety. The "cash register" is far more trustworthy and reliable.

Don't lie. For two good reasons: First, it makes you a liar; and second, it doesn't pay, long run or short.

Don't worry over the criticism of brainless people. Braying, whether by biped or quadruped, is only noise.

Don't lose faith in humanity because there are some black spots. Look at the sun, and then at the looking glass.

Don't quarrel over circumstances, nor fret over impossibilities. It's far better to climb mountains than curse them.

Don't be stingy because some of your charity went wrong. Think how much wasted mercy has been poured out on you.

Don't read these "Don'ts" and then do them, for you will suffer. I know it, for I have tried it. Some before conversion, some after.

KEEP BUSY.

A busy appearance about the store is a good method of impressing customers that your store is the place to trade.

Everybody likes to be with the majority, and if your clerks and yourself are always busy it creates the impression that you are doing a large business.

The habit of gossiping with people who enter is to be strongly condemned, as it makes your place a loafer's resort.

Give your customers to understand that you have enough business to attend to to keep you busy and must reserve your time for that. It is unnecessary to insult anyone to make this plan a success, as all persons are in the habit of giving credit to a busy man of being a successful man.

BE POLITE TO CUSTOMERS.

A REPUTATION for intelligence and truthfulness is indispensable to a permanent and satisfying success in the grocery business, and politeness is also among the few weapons that the small dealer has at his command to meet the competition of larger dealers who buy their goods more cheaply. But the larger the business the greater the number of hands required, and consequently the less chance of the customers being treated with difference. That these advantages are not fully realized and utilized by the average retailer is well known to all who come in contact with them. One important point in particular to be impressed upon your assistants is the necessity of careful and polite attention to the smallest customers. There is an old and trite adage which says, "When you buy keep one eye on the goods and the other on the seller, but when you sell keep both eyes on the buyer." Customers are drawn to the dealer who greets them cordially, treats them with civility, shows them little courtesies, manifests an interest in their wants and seeks to gain their confidence. Do not imagine that customers consider cheap goods and "cut prices" are the equivalent for such treatment, for if you do you will soon have to discontinue business for lack of brains or to be sold out altogether, although you may charge your misfortune to other causes.

HOLD YOUR TRADE.

While going out after new business, don't overlook the importance of holding your old customers. If old friends cease trading with you, try to find out what is wrong, and make it right. Try not to have any cause of dissatisfaction. If a customer makes a complaint, arrange the matter satisfactorily, even though it costs you something to do so.

UNITY.

Take your clerks into your confidence. If you have a line that is moving slowly whisper it confidentially to them and see them hustle to get it out of stock.

SUCCESS.

It is not stopping when the fight is won,
  It is not resting when the march is made,
But it is pressing ever on and on.
  It is not ceasing when the game is played
Nor folding hands when one task has an end—
  The laurel withers, and the bay will fade
When the last hill is climbed, the last song penned,
  The last nail driven, the last girder laid.

One prize achieved? Ahead then glows the next:
  He who would win must make the further quest.
Success is his who, wearied and perplexed,
  Still ever onward to new goals has pressed,
Who sees each day more misty heights to climb,
  Who feels each day new thrills in his breast,
Who does not count the loss of thought or time
  That brings him step by step up to his best.

GOOD SERVICE.

A cheap clerk will cost more money in the long run and make half as much profit for a merchant as a higher priced clerk.

A well paid man loves his employer and watches his employer's interests and saves his employer's profits.

A cheap clerk does neither and because of his enforced poverty, he sometimes becomes dishonest. "The laborer is worthy of his hire," and the "higher" it is the more worthy he is.

VALUABLE POINTERS.

The man who delays one day must wait two.

The folly of an hour may undo a lifetime of fair fame.

The man who does the very best he can need fear no shame.

Each man must live his own life and bear his own burdens or miss all true development.

* * *

Do not worry. The cloud that hangs darkly over you may burst its fury many miles away.

They who keep straight on doing their best work each day will reach the mountain top of success.

Never go anywhere expecting others to make you happy. Carry your happiness with you, and you will be sure to have it wherever you go.

* * *

There is so much bad in the best of us,
There is so much good in the worst of us,
That it scarcely behooves any of us
To talk about the rest of us.

* * *

When a "pointer" points there is game ahead, and you will get it if your head is clear. You couldn't hunt small game successfully without a "pointer," The grocer of to-day is after small game, and The Canadian Grocer is a valuable pointer for him.

"Why did you quit your job?"

"There was a fellow in the office I couldn't get along with at all, and rather than have any trouble with him I got out."

"Who was he?"

"He was the—er—boss. Seems to me you're mighty inquisitive."

THE FRANKFORD CANNING AND PACKING CO., LIMITED

Independent Packers

FRANKFORD, ONT.

A. H. ALLEN, Manager

Quaker Canned Goods

We finished packing Corn on the 6th this month and Tomatoes on the 13th. Taking the season altogether it has been the most favorable for quality we have ever experienced, the weather being about perfect all through the season for maturing vegetables in splendid condition. This applies to all lines, commencing with Peas and running right along into Beans, Corn and Tomatoes. With the fine quality of canned goods this season and the moderate prices there should be an enormous increase in the sales over previous years. While the pack has been large it does not exceed in our estimation the pack of two years ago in any line. Of course, we cannot speak for the whole country, but we know this applies to our pack. Judging from this we believe every case of Corn, Tomatoes, Peas and Beans packed will go into consumption before new goods come on the market next year. The fine quality of the goods alone this year over previous years should make an enormous increase in consumption, to say nothing of the much lower price the consumer can buy goods compared to the last two years. We packed thirteen thousand cases of Sugar and Cream Corn. This is a new line for us and is as fine in quality as the name denotes. We expect with this 13,000 cases sprinkled between the two oceans to lay the foundation for a trade in this line that will take the entire capacity of one of our factories next year to cater to.

THE PACKERS OF QUAKER CANNED GOODS

CANADA'S ANCIENT LANDMARKS

BONSECOURS MARKET, MONTREAL

By M. Romes Tasse.

THERE is in Montreal a place known for miles around and famous all through the country, where can be seen people from distant towns and where can be bought the products of the Province; that is Bonsecours Market.

Its immense building and central location make it the main gathering place of country producers belonging to neighboring districts of Montreal. It is open all the year round and all the days in the week, especially on Tuesdays and Fridays, when an enormous and busy crowd of farmers and city people move in the wide alleys of the building and between the numberless carts standing in rows all around the market.

Habitant in Bonsecours Market.

An early riser who could get down there long enough before dawn would witness the most original and peculiar scenes to be described. Near five o'clock in the morning on market days farmers begin to arrive, few at a time, perched on muddy, shaking wagons, pulled by patient and tired-looking horses. The cart is pushed against the sidewalk with its back to the market building, the man jumps down, unrigs the horse and takes it to a near boarding stable while the wife and boy proceed to display the goods and turn the wagon into a little shop of its own. Generally after this preliminary work has been done the women go up in the large halls of the market with baskets of eggs, butter in small, shapely pieces, hand-made sausages, cheese and other articles of farm industry.

The great majority of the farmers who come to Bonsecours Market are French-Canadians. They are a very picturesque and interesting sort of people. The men are mostly tall and strong, and very polite and obliging. Their summer attire differs little from that of the city man, only that it is a little old in fashion. Winter, however, brings out something more striking in their dress and the farmers are to be seen walking up and down the market in the well-known typical "habitant" costume—a long coat of fur or of some thick cloth in light and bright shades, a wool belt, mostly red, a wool "tuque" and long shin boots.

Women generally are short and stout, and very talkative. It would be very daring, however, to attempt a description of their manner of dress, for, as in the cities, country women are sometimes "coquettes," and avoid adopting a uniform style of dress. They adore bright and striking colors, such as red, blue, yellow, and pay little or no attention whether it suits their complexion or not. Then cold weather comes, sightly dresses give way to more suitable clothing. Fur caps and coats and black skirts with large and warm wool mits form the winter apparel.

During business hours the farmers sit at the back of their wagons and smoke their old clay pipes. They often address the passer-by to see their goods, handling them with great gestures and loud praises. They carry attractive stocks of the country's products, such as fruits, vegetables, maple syrup and sugar, baskets, straw hats, wool mits, stockings and "toques," fowls, butter and cheese according to the season.

The north side of the market is occupied by retail merchants of butter, cheese, poultry and such, while on the river front wholesale fruit and vegetable merchants carry on a large business.

The first floor is divided into large butchers' shops and fine refrigerators, full of the best meats. There an army of clerks move in every direction, carrying quarters of beef, pork and mutton, and behind the counters, hurrying to serve a crowd of customers.

From the main entrance on St. Paul street stairs of easy access lead to the upper floor and land the visitor right under the dome and into the centre of the building. From that point to both ends extend two vast halls. On two rows of tables disposed lengthwise to the halls are displayed stocks of eggs, little pieces of the finest butter and a number of other articles made by the industrious farmers. Those halls are very bright and wide, and can contain an enormous number of people.

The windows offer a very pretty sight. The harbor of Montreal with its large ocean vessels and pretty white steamboats; in the distance St. Helen's Island, a popular summer resort, and at the back the fine blue mountains of Beloeil and St. Bruno. Sights are also very fine in winter, when the river St. Lawrence is white with ice. Farmers cross over on the numerous crossings from the south shore and skaters enjoy themselves and indulge in their favorite sport near the deserted and quiet wharves.

Returning from Market—Sketched from Life on River Road in Winter.

Bonsecours Market derives its name from a historic church nearby called Notre Dame de Bonsecours (Our Lady of Good Help), built in 1657, only 15 years after the foundation of Montreal.

It is near at hand to ferry boats and railway stations and affords all facilities for the farmers to sell their products. On market days it is crowded with city merchants and people who come there to make their purchases, and it is seldom that farmers have to remain at the market after noon time, for they usually find buyers and ample chances to dispose of their whole stock before that hour.

The patrons had increased to such a number that some three years ago the city of Montreal had to provide the farmers with extra space.

After much debating, Jacques Cartier Square and a few square feet of land adjoining were made suitable for the purpose. Jacques Cartier's place is a very broad hill only a few minutes' walk from Bonsecours Market. It runs from Notre Dame street to the river front and from top to bottom in the middle of it runs a wide sidewalk where the farmers leave their carts. Right at the top of that hill stands gallant Nelson's monument, which was many years ago a cause of ill-feeling to all French-Canadians. However, this has disappeared, and the fact that a French-Canadian has no feeling of anger (or such) about this commemorative stone is another proof of the better and progressive "entente" between the two races.

Jacques Cartier Square when crowded with farmers' carts and thronged with crowds of purchasers affords one of the queerest and most interesting sights in Montreal; in fact, it has become famous.

There is no doubt that further improvements will have to be made, as buyers and sellers are constantly increasing in number.

SEASONABLE HINTS.

DON'T limit yourself to ten minutes when talking to a prospective customer, but talk as long as you think there is a chance to do good, but be dead sure that you don't talk too much.

Don't assume to know more about your customer's business that he does himself, for you can't make him believe it.

Don't "put on" a civility or formal manner which is not natural to you, and never try to flatter a man; sincerity is as commendable in business as it is in religion.

Don't beg a man to look over your line, as that makes it appear that you are short on argument, but rather explain to him that you have something in your line that he will find to be a bargain.

Don't underestimate your difficulties, nor overestimate them.

Don't fail to let your customer talk if he is inclined to do so, as by listening to what he has to say you learn what his ideas are, and also show the respect that is due him.

Don't dodge a question, but answer it fairly and squarely.

Don't forget that every man has his own peculiarities which should be met in different ways.

The twentieth century method is to advertise—advertise your business by honest, fair and courteous treatment of your customers, through the medium of your stationery, your booklets, your store windows, the interior arrangement of your store, your treatment of your clerks, and your own countenance. Look pleasant and keep sweet.

PRODUCE AND PROVISIONS

THE PACKING INDUSTRY.

A FEW years ago the Canadian farmer got the idea that immense sums of money were being made at his expense by the packers, and that the only way to get their proper worth for his hogs was to pack them himself. As a result of this idea we had an epidemic of co-operative pork factories. The supply of hogs was not materially increased and competition did indeed put up the price the farmer received for the product of his pen, but in short order put out of business the packing enterprises in which he had invested his money.

In competition with concerns of established connection and experienced management the small co-operative factory did not prove a success and has largely passed away.

Of late the movement has taken another turn in the direction of consolidation and growth of the older and better established firms. As might have been expected a number of the factories which sprang up in the packing boom have fallen into stronger hands and are now being operated as branch factories. Instances of this are the factory at Brantford taken over by the Geo. Matthews Co., the Harriston factory which was secured a few months ago by the William Davies Co., and the Fergus factory which has but recently been purchased by the William Ryan Co.

The older firms have not been content with merely picking up the stragglers that fall by the way, but there has been a progressive movement noticeable in other lines. The Park, Blackwell Co. announced early in the year their intention of installing a plant for the putting up of tinned meats of all kinds and have completed this addition to their organization and are now about to place their canned goods on the market. The William Ryan Co. in the spring began the erection of a branch in Aylmer and later purchased the plant of the Fergus Co. This they are enlarging and will do their building there, utilizing their depot at Aylmer for produce.

Gunns, Limited, have in course of erection at Toronto Junction a large factory for general abattoir and packing purposes. In Montreal the William Davies Co. are erecting a plant of large proportions, though not equal in size to the one at Toronto. The packing interests of Montreal have also a new concern in the Montreal Packing Co. who have a fine and well laid out factory in the stock yards district at Point St. Charles. A rumor has also been current for some time to the effect that one of the large Chicago packers has been negotiating to secure an opening in the Northwest. This has not as yet been confirmed.

As it stands the industry is at present in pretty fairly strong hands and inquiry elicits the information that most of the Canadian factories have had a fair year's business. Complaint, however, is still made of a scarcity of hogs owing to the scarcity and high price of feed the past season. In view, however, of the heavy crops that have just been taken care of the farmers will have plenty of rough feed suitable for hogs and it is expected that supplies will be forthcoming in greater abundance in the next few months. Otherwise the outlook would be not over encouraging as the area in which the bacon hog is raised has not been materially enlarged and the new factories which have recently been erected or are in the course of being built, will constitute an additional source of demand.

In some quarters it is contended that the export trade has not been encouragingly profitable, and some packers even claim that the past season has been without profit.

A theory has been advanced in explanation of this fact that owing to the continued scarcity of hogs for some time past packers have lowered their standards and are accepting hogs in order to keep the factories going which they would not have touched a few years ago. It is further alleged that by a system recently adopted, buyers of some of the large companies are given a maximum average price and must not allow their costs to exceed this. As a result there has been a demand for poorer class hogs to bring down the average, and a most demoralizing rebuff given the improvement of the Ontario hog, which was so encouraging when stricter standards were maintained.

A further feature of the provision trade that demands attention is the development of the "packer's retail store." For years the "factory store" has not been unknown, but it was local and solitary. The plan was carried to its most successful development in Toronto where a large packing house now has stores. From Toronto this house reached out and planted its branches in the other cities and towns of Ontario and has recently entered the Montreal field, where it has begun a war with a rival concern located in the metropolis which had been working along the same lines, but not to the same degree. In a number of other cities also the factory store is in evidence. Beginning with fresh and cured meats and produce these stores have added line after line in a grocery way, such as tea, canned vegetables, etc., until they have become in many places serious rivals of the regular grocer.

With competition of this nature to face the only alternative the grocer has is, as has been repeatedly advised by The Canadian Grocer, the addition of a fresh and cured meat department to his store. The grocer of the future must carry "everything to eat."

THE QUALITY OF BACON HOGS.

THE high prices for hogs which have been ruling for some time are having a somewhat serious effect on the Canadian market for the dressed product.

Farmers themselves are aware that prices cannot maintain the present high parity, these prices being attained to attract to the market well conditioned hogs, the farmers being inclined to hold back supplies. Farmers, however, in order to secure the advantage of present prices, have been hastening hogs to the packers before they were in proper condition, having the effect of materially reducing the grading, and consequently lowering the output of the best grades of bacon and ham for the export trade.

The export market is of the first importance—it has been gained upon superiority—and only by keeping a high standard can it be held. The Danish and English market prices have been maintained against those of the American production by force of quality alone.

The condition of the three centres of European trade (Liverpool, London, and Southampton) is at present anything but satisfactory. The cold storage warehouses are fielled with low grade American products, and their holders are ready to rush the market at the first signs of an advance so that the hope of the Canadian exporter is in his ability to maintain quality, and so keep his price on a paying basis.

The U. S. packers to a large extent are the makers of the farmers' prices, the farmer consequently markets his hogs as soon as it reaches their limit, without regard to the high standard of condition ruling in Canadian markets, the result being that the American export products cannot be compared with the Canadian, which has been able to lead the market by from three to four shillings per cwt.

PACKING CHICKENS FOR SHIPMENT.

SOME very useful data with reference to the latest methods of packing poultry for shipment in small lots has recently appeared in the Butcher's Advocate. It will be instructive reading for any of our readers who are connected with this line of farm produce, and tends to prove that tight packing is the secret of successful shipments.

There are two systems of packing cases in general use in the United States. One system packs in a case holding one layer of chickens and exposes the chickens' backs when the cover is removed. The other system uses a deep, square case sufficiently large to contain two layers of six chickens. The feet, legs and sides of the chickens are presented on lifting the cover. Each system has from 3 to 5 sizes of boxes and chickens of a special weight are packed in each box. Large chickens are not packed with small chickens and vice versa.

The one layer box is preferable for the following reasons: When the cover is removed every chicken can be examined at once. With the two layer case the six top chickens require to be removed from the box before the lower chickens can be inspected. It is almost impossible to separate chickens that are hard frozen, so that the two layer case is not suitable for storage chickens.

The backs of the chickens in the one layer case are most presentable, and show correctly the relative amount of flesh elsewhere on the carcase. The chickens in the two layer case impress the buyer unfavorably, on account of viewing the different feet and legs, wings and sides of the chickens.

* * *

The one layer cases are lined with parchment paper and lend attractiveness to the chickens. When made of basswood, poplar, or spruce, they are odorless and can be stored with butter, etc., without imparting a taint. They cost from $10 to $15 per 100.

The five sized cases are as follows:

	Weight, Lbs.	Inside Measurements, Inches.
No. 1	6	19 13-16 by 15 5-16 by 4.
No. 2	7	21 1-2 by 16 by 4 3-16.
No. 3	8	23 3-16 by 16 5-8 by 4 5-16.
No. 4	9	24 13-16 by 17 5-16 by 4 5-8.
No. 5	10	26 1-2 by 18 by 5 1-4.

Case 1 holds 12 chickens weighing (plucked) from 2 1-2 to 3 lbs. each.
Case 2 holds 12 chickens weighing (plucked) from 3 to 3 1-2 lbs. each.
Case 3 holds 12 chickens weighing (plucked) from 3 1-2 to 4 lbs. each.
Case 4 holds 12 chickens weighing (plucked) from 4 to 4 3-4 lbs. each.
Case 5 holds 12 chickens weighing (plucked) from 4 3-4 to 5 1-2 lbs. each.

Parchment paper: Six sheets of light weight parchment or butter paper are required for each case: two sheets, 18 by 26 inches; two sheets, 10 by 26 inches, and two sheets, 10 by 18 inches. Parchment is preferable to manila paper, because there is no danger of its sticking to the chickens if the cases become damp. The small additional cost is returned in the more clean and attractive appearance of the parchment lined case. Cases for cold storage should always be lined with parchment paper.

The chickens are packed with their breasts up: The case when opened shows the chickens' backs. The heads of the first row (6) of chickens are placed straight out on the bottom of the box, and the backs of the row of chickens packed last are placed against them. The heads of the row of chickens packed last are arranged in the centre of the case. The parchment paper should be neatly tucked around the case and before the cover is nailed down the upper (18 by 26-inch) sheet of parchment paper should be placed in a 25 per cent solution of formalin. This will prevent the development of mold.

Mold is caused by warmth and dampness in the cases. As the cases are almost air-tight, it is imperative that the chickens are free from animal heat and dry on the skins before they are packed. When cases of other dimensions are made use of for packing, it is necessary to bear in mind that the chickens must be packed absolutely tight. Loose packing means bruised chickens, even on short shipments.

BUTTER HISTORY.

MARTIN SCHOOKIUS, a learned Dutchman, has traced the history of butter in such a precise manner that there is no reason to doubt the accuracy of his statements. Beginning with citing all the different names that butter bears in ancient and in modern languages, he investigates their etomology with great care.

The mode of making butter in ancient times must have differed very much from that in vogue at the present time, and there is no room for doubt that the substance was really a rougher and coarser form of what we call butter to-day. Butter did not, however, among modern uations play the important part that it now does until three centuries or so ago, when it greatly increased in use.

The earliest traces of the extensive use of butter in France date from 1491, when the Sovereign Pontiff, Innocent VIII., permitted the Queen Anne and the inhabitants of the Duchy of Brittany, to use butter in their Lenten cookery, provided that they gave certain alms to the church. The alms so gained were devoted to the building principally of the great towers of the churches and cathedrals. This was so much the case that, until within recent years, the towers of Notre Dame de Paris and of the cathedrals of Rouen and Bourges were known as the "butter towers" among the populace.

Nevertheless, despite the Papal permission the inhabitants of certain Provinces of France showed considerable dislike to the use of butter, especially in the south of France. At the present day butter is an article of universal use, and this being so it is natural that it should often be the cause of fraud and deceit.

Ever since butter has been in general use there have always been frauds and artifices, and it seems almost impossible for the law to put a stop to them. We have decrees of the reign of Louis XV of France relating to the adulterations that butter is the cause of in many instances, and from them it appears that that evil was fully as widespread as it is to-day. The King in one decree says:

"Since We learn from our royal procurator that the sale and distribution of milk and butter is attended with considerable fraud and deceit and the unlawful practice of substituting a substance inferior to the substance demanded, We urge the person charged with the due administration of the law in the Provinces of our kingdom to see that the greatest possible efforts are made to stop this abominable practice." '

HOGS FOR PORK PRODUCTION.

SOME time ago some interesting experiments were made in fattening hogs for pork production which are of particular interest at the present time, when so much complaint is being made of the imperfection of the ordinary farm hog sent to market.

Thirty-two pigs ranging in weight from 43 to 80 lbs. were divided into eight groups of four pigs each, and for the next 90 days fed experimentally. In each case the individuals in a group were nearly uniform in size. The groups, however, showed considerable difference in their total weight, the heaviest group weighing 300 lbs., or 75 lbs. per pig, while the lightest group weighed 180 lbs., or 45 lbs. per pig. It was not possible to secure a more uniform lot at the time and it was considered better to have some considerable difference in the total weights of the lots rather than to have some large and some small pigs in each lot.

The experiment lasted 90 days. During that time the pigs were confined in pens with small, floored yards attached. Lots 7 and 8, however, were outside, lot 7 having a small, unfloored yard and a cabin wherein to sleep, while lot 8 had a clover pasture of about one-eighth of an acre area and a cabin wherein to sleep.

The results speak for themselves, but it will be noticed that all supplementary foods fed, other than skim milk and pasture, had the effect of raising the cost of production. Skim milk, on the contrary, lowered the cost very materially, and pasture had a similar effect in a lesser degree. The meal used was a mixture of half shorts and half mixed grains, oats, peas and barley.

In estimating the cost of production, the meal ration is valued at $1.00 per 100 lbs., the skim milk at 15c. per 100 lbs., and the supplementary foods or stock foods at the cost of the same on the Ottawa market. viz: "Anglo-Saxon Stock Food," 10c. per lb.; "International Stock Food," 15c. per lb.; "Herbageum," 12 1-2c. per lb.; and sugar and flax, 2 1-2c. per lb. Pasture is not valued, but its value may be adduced from the data given.

RESIGNATION OF MR. PROUT.

MR. GEO. W. PROUT, who for nearly a year has been in charge of the produce department of J. Y. Griffin & Co., Winnipeg, resigned last week in order to go into the manufacture of creamery butter and a general wholesale grocery business. Associated with Mr. Prout will be several well-known Winnipeg business men, and in all probability a joint stock company will be formed. Mr. Prout has managed produce departments of wholesale produce houses in Montreal, Toronto and Ottawa, before removing to Winnipeg, and his long experience should stand him in good stead in his independent business venture. Further announcements will be made in this paper when the new company commence business.

LONDON PRODUCE LETTER

By Our London, Eng., Correspondent.

IT is a real satisfaction to be able to report that the butter market here has assumed a brisker tone this week and good business is being transacted.

There is decidedly more doing in Canadian butter, and stocks are being cleared out as rapidly as possible. This is not, however, due to any improvement of price or better demand, but rather to the fact that holders are anxious to sell out. Even those holders who did not expect to obtain any very great profit out of Canadian butter, express disappointment at having to clear at such a small profit to themselves. But the position of the market does not seem to justify their hanging on any longer. Prices for Canadian range from 103s. to 108s., which of course is not at all compatible with prices now required. Some very choice saltless made 111s. a day or two back, but it is getting rather late for this, owing to the arrival of Australian "Saltless." In fact, the advent of this Australian butter is responsible for the increased activity in Canadian, for, as is always the case, Australian butter, being a new feature, commands a good deal of attention, and placed Canadian for the time more or less in the background. Hence, the desire of holders to clear, even at a low figure. Moreover, Australian butter, just arrived, is of excellent quality, and is making good prices—112s, a price which is almost 14s. higher than at this period last year.

According to Board of Trade returns, the imports of Canadian butter during the month of September were 55,613 cwts. for this year, as against 59,937 during September, 1904, and 39,152 cwts. 1903. The most noticeable feature about the butter imports for the past month is the enormous increase in imports from New South Wales when compared to previous years: 11,751 cwts. for September, 1905, as against only 1,636 cwts. in the same month 1904, and about 800 cwts. in 1903. Queensland also showed very material increases in this direction, but Victoria figures show that the 2,000 odd cwts. sent over were about the same as for September, 1904. New Zealand showed a slight decrease.

Perhaps it would not be amiss to mention just here that within the last few days some rather sharp criticism was passed upon the uncleanliness of some Canadian butter, which recently arrived on this market. Let it be understood that the complaint was made in a very friendly spirit; nor must it be supposed that the fault is imputed to Canadian butter generally. Far from that. But at the same time it must be admitted that this is not the first ime British importing houses have had to remonstrate at the dirty condition in which some Canadian butter is found upon inspection. The matter might be passed over in silence, since this unfortunate state of affairs is certainly not the rule, were it not for the fact that the carelessness of one or two Canadian creameries is liable to affect the reputation of the whole. In merchandise of every description, it invariably happens that the bad qualities have a more lasting effect than the goods ones, and the result of one or two parcels of Canadian butter in dirty condition arriving on this market may prove farther reaching in its evil consequences and more deleterious to future business than might at first be imagined. The impression is apt to get amongst importers that sufficient attention is not given to the cleanliness of Canadian creameries and of Canadian butter-making utensils. If Canadian creameries could secure as good a reputation all round—mark that "all round"—as Danish for cleanliness, and as high a reputation for uniformity of quality as New Zealand butter, they would be very, very near the acme of perfection.

Cheese—There is not much to report in this direction. The general outlook is satisfactory, although at the present moment trade is inclined to be dull. The reason for this, it appears, is that retailers are pursuing a very cautious policy in their buying—a policy which might be termed "hand to mouth." They are keeping very little on hand, because they do not believe that the September cheese has yet come along. Prices are at 56s. to 57s. for white, and 57s. to 58s. for colored. Colored cheese, it is reported, is running short and will not last out another week.

Board of Trade figures show that the imports of cheese from Canada during the month of September are smaller this year than for 1904 by about 5,000 cwts. and by about 73,000 cwts. as compared with 1903. General stocks show a proportionate decrease. In some senses this is satisfactory, for it must not be forgotten that but a few years ago, when imports of cheese were so heavy, it was quite impossible to find consumers, and prices went down in consequence. In fact, it was a time of over-production. This, however, has been followed by two seasons of short supplies, the result being that prices are standing at about ten shillings higher now than then.

It is difficult, however, to judge the real position of the market and to account for fluctuations in the market by merely quoting figures, for the simple reason that it is quite impossible to secure any accurate idea of the domestic production. This, it is known, is heavier than any imports, but it would be interesting in the extreme to know whether the British cheese industry is increasing or decreasing. Considering the high rents and the unsatisfactory state of agriculture, which has been attracting attention of recent years, it would not altogether be a matter of surprise to find that the British cheese industry is decreasing. The true state of affairs cannot be accurately guaged, but there is no doubt that in some of the old British cheese making centres, notably Leicestershire, farmers are not doing nearly so well as formerly.

Bacon—There is not much change to report in the position of affairs this week. Supplies continue in very moderate compass, and although the consumptive demand is not very good, it is sufficient to absorb what is coming.

Prices of secondary Danish were advanced yesterday (Oct. 13) which has had a hardening effect upon prices of Canadian, best brands of boxes and bales having moved freely at 59s.

CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN.

Montreal, Oct. 26, 1905.

THE retrospective and prospective, this year is not of a very profitable nature, and many of those engaged in this large business no doubt wish they had done less business on a different basis.

First, we must admit a shortage of supplies in the great consuming markets of the United Kingdom at the beginning of this season. In spite of this undoubted shortage there was a certain "bear" element trying to depress prices on the argument of fine weather and a large make. This went well for a time but when the contracts made for future delivery had to be filled, it was found that prices had not gone low enough to leave a profit, then the buying commenced in earnest and some houses who had not sold ahead were fortunate enough to get a good profit on their holdings.

100,000 cubic ft. cold storage (Lynde British) on our premises

Taking the season right through, the business has been a "gamble" with the odds always against the players, cheese being different to grain or provisions. When a sale for future delivery is made, the seller is obliged to discount the market; in other words, he has to sell at a lower price than what he could obtain for prompt shipment. This is the side of those selling "short." Now we come to those who buy goods hoping for an advancing market. Unless the advance is quick and decisive it means putting the goods into cold storage, and this is expensive in many ways. It means cost of storage, insurance, interest on money and shrinkage in weight. Now, if the market advances after carrying the goods for some time, this advance is on fresh made cheese and the goods in cold storage can only be sold as "seconds" at a reduced price, of course. If the advance in the market price is large enough the goods carried will show a profit even if they are sold below the ruling market value for finest quality, but, once more, it is a "gamble" with the odds against the players.

Grain and provisions can always be sold ahead at a higher price than market value, for prompt delivery; in other words, sufficient to pay for carrying charges. Not so with cheese; and yet, merchants engaged in this business, risking their capital, will continue to do what no other class of merchants would think of doing.

The result of all this is that it is a safe assertion that the enormous turnover of cheese in a year on this side of the Atlantic has left no profit for the trade. If profit and losses could be placed opposite each other this year, it would be found that the business had been done at no profit at all.

Now, why should this be thus? Surely every business man should expect to buy goods at less than the price he can sell them at. Business is generally not to be expected a matter of charity; nobody engages in business for the benefit of his health. A business man puts his capital and labor into his business, as a rule, to earn more than ordinary interest on his money invested, yet the great cheese trade of this country seems to be done "pro bono publico."

To put it mildly, our cheese merchants are trying to do business on the plan of buying at the highest possible price and, after they have bought their goods, they are underselling each other. The consequence is, first, the farmers are getting big prices for their milk and the British importers are getting cheap goods, the farmers always thinking they are not getting all that is due them, and the British importers thinking they are paying too much for the goods. Between them stands the merchant here, getting nothing for his capital and labor.

The dairy business or the business in dairy products may safely be called the "back bone" of the Dominion of Canada. Many millions of dollars are annually distributed in the country and all this vast business is done at hardly any profit to the merchants. This does not seem fair or right, but, after all, the merchants are to blame themselves. As long as they are willing to pay their good money to the farmers and supply the British importers with cheap goods, they will be gladly welcomed by both parties to continue their good work.

There is but little change to report in the situation on cheese. The recent markets in the country have been somewhat irregular and on the whole a shade lower, but this is more on account of an agreement among the buyers who are holding a lot of high priced goods and who naturally desire to reduce the average cost of goods on hand now. Export prices remain unchanged and as stocks here are not too heavy it is but fair to expect advancing prices during the winter months of non-production. Our season is very nearly ended. Many factories are already closed and others are only making a very limited quantity; the weather is getting cold and the pastures are dried up; cattle have to be housed during the nights and fed, and the flow of milk is small now.

To sum up, the cheese situation is healthy enough and prices cannot decline, unless something at present unforeseen happens, but in all probability we may expect considerably higher prices before the commencement of the new season next year.

Butter shows a decline which is perfectly natural in British markets, but it will not affect us very much here. The surplus has already been shipped out and what we have on hand now is none too much for our own requirements during the winter months. There is not much butter made during the winter and the quantity of winter made butter is not very desirable for best hotel and family trade, and we may now safely consider ourselves independent of the export trade, and prices will probably advance steadily in future, irrespective of the state of the markets in the U. K. which draw their supplies during the winter months principally from Australia and other countries.

PROVISION AND DAIRY MARKETS.

TORONTO.

THE local demand for provisions continues to show great activity. Supplies, however, are coming to hand very slowly and are found scarcely equal to the demand manifest.

Bacon and lard are particularly short in supply, and prices are consequently ruling firm, though no quotable change is manifest.

Fresh meats are ruling firm with fairly active demand.

Hogs in street lots are a little easier in price and show a drop equal to about 50c. Dressed hogs are added to our list this week at a quotation of $7.25 to $7.50 for western carlots.

Butter—Arrivals of butter continue to be short and scarcely equal to demand. Creamery butter shows a slight decline in value of about half a cent, whilst dairy butter is very little in evidence at the present moment. The probable closing in the near future of the cheese factories is now looked for as a preliminary to the opening up of the butter market and a consequent improvement in the market.

Eggs—There have been practically no arrivals of new laid eggs since our last report. Those that have arrived are of scarcely sufficient quantity to take account of. Dealers are now relying upon their accumulated storage stocks for present demands. Our quotations are raised accordingly. We quote:

New laid eggs, per doz	0 1 ½ 0 19½

Cheese—The cheese market continues to show general weakness on reports of sales on the local boards. Sellers continue to show disinclination to accept bidder's prices. An early adjustment on a more substantial basis is expected to strengthen the market. It is generally conceded that the prices which have been ruling at past sales have been higher than the situation really warrants. Large holders of cheese who have bought at previous sales are finding themselves seriously handicapped as the export trade at present shows no inclination to affect trade on the basis of margins referred to. There are reports of heavy stocks in storage being held in view of expected strengthening markets. The general thought however, appears to be that no advance is likely to take place above the present basis in the near future. We quote:

MONTREAL.

Provisions—Market is steady. Live hogs in good supply and demand selling at $6 to $6.50. Packers are securing all they want and are looking for lower prices. Farmers who have been too busy during harvest are now turning their attention to disposition of their live stock and bringing in their hogs. Dressed hogs are quoted at $8.75 to $9. Canned meats are easier and quoted ½c. lower. Hams and bacon are selling well; local demand is good. We quote:

Butter — There is little change to report since last issue. Some little shading in prices is being done though the feeling prevails that owing to the steady and heavy local demand the prices will not recede materially; they are now above export. Receipts are fairly good and steady. We quote:

Cheese—An easier tone is reported principally in October makes, and purchases of Quebec's were reported at 10½ to 10⅝c. on wharf. Township's 10⅞ to 11c., and Ontario's 11¼ to 11⅜c. The demand, however, is not heavy on any grades with a slight leaning towards the cheaper October makes.

Eggs—Firmness is noted this week. English buyers looking for very choicest stock as to quality and size. 23c. is said to be offered for such selected stock. Country producers are asking high prices and straight gathered are bringing 20 to 21c. No. 2 18½ to 19½c., and selects 23c. Receipts only moderate.

WINNIPEG.

Creamery Butter—Stocks held by jobbers are small, and as there is a very brisk demand the price has been advanced one cent. per lb. Selling prices to the retail grocery and provision trade are as follows:

IN MEMORIAM.

IT is with profound regret that the large circle of acquaintances and friends of Mr. St. Clair Balfour, the head of the well-known wholesale grocery firm of Balfour & Co., Hamilton, will hear of his sudden decease. Mr. Balfour had played an active and prominent part in the development of the grocery business of Hamilton.

He was active in the organization of the "Canada Grocers, Limited," the combine of which Balfour & Co. formed part, and for which he afterward journeyed to England as buyer. Mr. Balfour was an Orkney Island man, and was born on July 4, 1850. He came to Canada in 1870, and after coming to Hamilton entered the service of A. Murray & Co., dry goods merchants. Shortly after that he transferred to Brown, Gillespie & Co., wholesale grocers. This firm became known as Brown, Routh & Co., and on the death of Mr. Routh, Mr. Balfour was taken into partnership with Adam Brown. In 1890 Mr. Brown retired from the firm, and it then took its present name, Balfour & Co. At the time when Mr. Balfour was junior partner Hamilton was the great wholesale centre for Ontario, west of Toronto, and he had much to do with laying the foundations of the present extensive and successful business.

As a man he was not given to making himself prominent in public functions, but did much good in a quiet way. He was a good business man, and he was ever ready to extend a helping hand to those who were in need. Particularly thoughtful and generous was he to his employes, and no one will feel greater regret at his sudden death at a comparatively early age than those who were associated with Mr. Balfour in a business way. As a member of the Thistle Club he enjoyed the respect of a very wide circle of friends among the most influential citizens.

Of late years Mr. Balfour has not taken quite as active a part in the management of the business of Balfour & Co., although his interests to the last were keen on everything concerning the welfare of the company.

Up to a quite recent date he appears to have been in his usual good health, and as late as Wednesday of last week was at the office. However, he was taken with an attack of hemorrhage, under which he gradually sank, passing away at his home on Duke street on Tuesday, the 10th inst.

Butchers, Merchants and Hide Buyers Should write to CARROLL S. PAGE, Hyde Park, Vt., U.S.A., who wishes to purchase their Hides, Calfskins, Sheep Pelts, Tallow and Bones. He pays spot cash. He pays the freights. He pays full market values. THE PASSING OF WILLIAM INCE.

NO figure has of recent years passed from the stage of commercial activity that caused more regret that the passing of the late William Ince.

For half a century he was an active factor in the wholesale grocery trade of Canada, and the reputation he earned during that long period is registered in plain figures on the credit side of the ledger.

His face was kindly, his greeting genial, and although he was an octogenarian his death is none the less regretted.

With his departure we lose another of what we commonly call the old type of business men; the type that is becoming altogether too scarce. The old type took time to live and time to think of something besides the everyday grind of business. And it made better men out of them.

To-day the life of business is too strenuous for anything but business. Business men have not time for public affairs and the country is all the poorer thereby.

A BLIND MINISTER.

HON. MR. EMMERSON, the Minister of Railways, proposes to make an effort to put the Intercolonial Railway on a paying basis. He is to be commended. No one has yet succeeded in this task. The net excess of expenditure since Confederation is about $9,500,000.

The road when it was constructed was chiefly designed for military and not commercial purposes. This was a drawback, but it is not the only one. There is another, and one which militates more against the financial welfare of the railway than any other, and that is political influence. The Minister of Railways does not appear to recognize this, at any rate he does not acknowledge it. On the contrary he lays the onus for the unsatisfactory financial condition of the railway upon the business men of the country: The boards of trade because of their organized influence, and the shippers because they do not pay high enough freight rates. He has not a word to say about the political incubus.

In his plan of reform the business men, being the chief sinners, are to bear the greater punishment. In fact they are to bear it all. The freight rates, he tells us, are to be raised to a point that will make the railway profitable.

If the shippers using the Intercolonial Railway are not paying adequate rates for the service they enjoy, an effort should certainly be made to compel them to do so. But before this is done steps should be taken to destroy the graft of the politician. It is he who is sucking the life-blood out of the Intercolonial, not the business man. And it is well known to everyone in and out of Parliament except the Minister of Railways. It is no worse under the present Government than under its predecessors. Under Conservative, as well as Liberal, administrations the iniquitous and unbusiness-like system has obtained.

Before the railway can be made a financial success it must be put upon a business-like basis.

Instead of being managed by politicians it should be managed by experienced railway men free from political interference. In other words it should be managed by a commission. And if Mr. Emmerson has any doubts about this let him appoint competent men to make a thorough investigation and report ways and means of bringing about a state of affairs in the management of the Intercolonial which even Mr. Emmerson himself admits is so necessary. Mr. Emmerson means well, no doubt, but he is blind to the real necessities of the case.

Mr. Emmerson proposes to begin at the wrong end. Not until he begins right will the business men of the country or anyone else have confidence in his efforts to put the Intercolonial on a more satisfactory financial basis.

THE WEST INDIES.

THE oft discussed question of the confederation between Canada and the West Indies appears still to command great interest, especially in the Maritime Provinces. The feeling in the Islands themselves appears to be distinctly in favor of a closer relationship with Canada. This feeling has grown in intensity since the advantages accruing from the preferential tariff have been realized.

At the same time, however, there is a hesitancy lest any further mutual approachment of the two countries should result in putting distance between the West Indies and the United States, the latter being by far their largest purchaser of tropical fruits, and the magnitude of this trade being too important for the West Indies to run the risk of retaliation at the present moment. All the articles, however, which are imported by the West Indies have already a large consumption in Canada, and with a closer relationship between the two countries, which would be brought about by federation, there is no doubt that Canada would play as equally an important part in West Indian trade as the United States does now.

First and foremost, however, appears to be the immediate need of inaugurating a fast and continuous line of steamers, not only to meet the already substantial trade, but in order to cope and compete with the rates of freight now ruling at United States ports. The feeling in the Maritime Provinces is distinctly in favor of such a movement and it is considered that such a service would have no difficulty in obtaining full cargoes both ways.

The imports at the present time of the British West Indies amount to some $30,000,000, comprising principally fish, provisions, lumber and flour. For years much of this has been drawn from Canada, but by far the bulk from the United States. There is no excuse for this. Canada could supply all these imports if necessary, as cheaply and of as good quality as the United States. With the establishment of competing freight services the ability of Canada would soon become evident and the way opened up for the direct shipment to Canada of West Indian goods.

The chief obstacle would thus be removed to the approachment of the two countries, and confederation would be a simple and natural proposition.

No doubt one of the advantages which would accrue to the West Indies themselves would be distinctly cheaper administration as well as the establishment of a substantial commercial status.

The question of the twelve hundred miles of distance is really no obstacle in this age of ready communication, a fact which has been demonstrated again and again in like circumstances with other countries. The eighteen hundred miles of distance has proved no obstacle to the federal union of New Zealand and Australia, and distance need not be taken into account in this instance either.

A LITTLE SELF EXAMINATION.

IN no season in her history have the farms of Canada yielded the wealth that they did this year.

Every Province has been blessed with abundant crops of grain and fruits, while the prices at which they have sold and are being sold are good. In live stock there is a ready market at good prices for all that the farmer can produce.

The railways are prosperous and the bank returns and clearings are gratifying.

If Canada, therefore, cannot rejoice and be glad what country in the world can?

But, while Providence or Nature, or by whatever name we may call the power which has brought us the good crops is so generous, are we, as Canadians, doing our best? Are our business methods right?

Are we putting our very best efforts into the goods we make?

Are we giving honest measure and weight in the merchandise we sell? And when we fill orders are they up to sample? If we are not it is time we did.

When Nature is doing so much for us we ought at least to do the best we can for ourselves. We ought to be thorough. Self respect demands it.

CHILDISH TAXATION.

TAXES imposed by one Province against the commercial travelers of other Provinces is national childishness. Canada is old enough and is certainly big enough to discard the swaddling clothes of provincialism in such matters.

The British constitution in which the British North American Provinces were wrapped at Confederation specifically declared that it was ultra vires for the Provinces to levy customs duties against each other's products.

In the strict letter of the law none of the Provinces have essayed to do this, but in spirit some of them are grievous transgressors.

We do not want provincialism in this country. We want nationalism. The Civil War killed provincialism in the United States. And we now want some powerful force to kill it in Canada. The Federal Government has the power but it lacks the inclination.

MANUFACTURERS VS. JOBBERS

A STRONG delegation of jobbers and wholesalers from Western Canada appeared before the transportation committee of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in Toronto on Wednesday, and protested against the action of that body in seeking to have the present regulations with regard to mixed carloads altered.

Prior to 1903 the rule was that anyone could make up a car, putting in as many different articles as he wished, but having to pay freight on the whole carload at the rate of the highest article in it. For instance, if a manufacturer were to fill a car with a mixed load of buggies, dry goods and hardware, he would pay freight on the whole car at the rate on buggies, because the freight rate on buggies is higher than that on dry goods or hardware.

In 1903 this rule was changed. Since then the possible grouping of merchandise to make up a car lot is confined to the class of articles which any one dealer would handle. For instance, general hardware, paints, oils, etc., could be shipped in one car. Similarly the various things which enter into a grocer's stock could be mixed to make up a car.

This arrangement, of course, militates against certain manufacturers. If a manufacturer makes one article which is sold in a hardware store and another which is sold in a carriage shop, even if they are made under the same roof, he cannot put them in a car together without paying freight on them at broken car lot rates. This, of course, much exceeds the rate when the car is taken complete.

Ever since the last change, in 1903, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association have been moving for a restoration of the old regulation or a betterment of the present rates. They demand that a manufacturer be allowed to use everything which he manufactures in making up a car lot. In spite of the protest of the westerners, supported by a number of eastern manufacturers, the association will persist in its present contention.

In British Columbia Province it is said that the present move on the part of the eastern manufacturers is in consequence of the commercial travelers' tax put upon their representatives coming into the Province of British Columbia to do business. If they succeed in restoring rule two it is said the B. C. wholesale dealers will undoubtedly press for a still further tax upon these eastern travelers in order to hold their own against the manufacturers of the east.

HAPPENINGS AT OTTAWA

AT THE GRAND UNION ROTUNDA.

THE GROCER representative was in Ottawa last week. His customary domicile when in the Capital City is the Grand Union Hotel, and it is a good sign of the popularity of this hostelry to find at all times so many "Knights of the Road and the Grip" under its shingles, for "the boys" generally like to be comfortable and well fed. So much for "Jim" Paisley's.

The veteran John Everett, he who has made Christie, Brown's biscuits known throughout Ontario for over 20 years, was there, reminiscent of the good times he had in lovely Devon during his Summer vacation. John never tires of telling the truth about Christie's biscuits, but some of his English experiences need a lot of salt. However, "the boys," with whom he is deservedly popular, are all willing to "smile" with him.

Jack Gregg, representing Surprise Soap, was on hand as large and energetic as ever—full of those new "balloon" stories and the great drawing power of the new ad gotten up by his company. For a convincing talker and persistent and consistent worker, Jack Gregg is hard to beat. That's what he says his soap is. There is only one complaint that Jack Gregg ever has when he strikes Ottawa, and that is to find genial Bert. Geen still selling shoes instead of soap. Jack thinks Bert. would do well in soap.

From the city of the straits, lovely Detroit, was met Mr. A. L. Hay, who has been for many years introducing to the trade of the Dominion what is now found on almost every table, salad dressing—the particular brand being decidedly appropriate for a country with monarchial leanings, though how such democratic people as the Horton-Cato Mfg. Co. came to select "Royal" as a brand is a puzzler. Mr. Hay was most pleased with his business in the east, and says "Royal" dressing suits him and his trade.

Mr. B. L. Nowell. Montreal, agent for Lamont, Corliss & Co., New York, was met, pleasantly satisfied with his business. Representing, as he does, such well-known lines as Peter's Chocolate, Mackintosh's Toffee, and X-Ray Stove Polish, he says he was kept busy. Mr. Nowell reported that the newly inaugurated campaign of introducing Kneipp Malt Coffee was going along finely. One doesn't have to walk around barefooted in the dewy grass like poor John D. Rockefeller to enjoy the benefits of this Kneipp cure. Mr. Nowell was working west as far as Windsor.

A much-traveled and experienced salesman was met in the person of Mr. J. T. Cuddy, who represents the Montreal Packing Co., Limited, in Eastern Ontario. Mr. Cuddy knows something of the packing business, having for over fifteen years been employed in the Swift Packing Co.'s establishment; also represented that concern on the road, covering the Southwestern States as far as the Rio Grande. A constantly increasing sale is the report made by Mr. Cuddy.

Geo. D. MacAllister, who sells twine, rope, etc., for Shurly & Derrett, Dovercourt Twine Mills, Toronto, dropped in on Friday from Montreal and Quebec. To The Grocer's inquiries "No complaint as to business" was his reply.

Mr. Nash, of Lockerby Bros., Montreal, with Mr. R. Dallas, representing Carter, Macy & Co., New York and Yokohama, were met in the rotunda, and The Grocer renewed old acquaintanceship with the latter. Mr. Nash is a veteran tea salesman, grounded in that great tea school, London, Eng., Mincing Lane, the great tea district of the city. No better recommeodation than an English tea training such as Mr. Nash has had need be desired.

Mr. Wm. Galbraith, of Carter, Galbraith & Co., Montreal, granted The Grocer a few minutes' time. To Montrealers, and particularly residents of aristocratic Westmount, Mr. Galbraith is known as the guardian of the people's interests in that interesting section. Though adjudged a "stormy petrel" by certain members of the Westmount Council. Mr. Galbraith sees only one thing—the interests of the people. It may be mentioned that his strenuous fight in the council on one important matter last year is said to have saved the suburb some $20,000. Mr. Galbraith was running in from a special trip along the line.

Teddy Sterling, he of Lytle's, dropped in from a nearby hostelry—as full of business and as pleasant as ever. Teddy has strong views on the pickle question, some of which would be a benefit to the Tariff Commission. Of course he believes in Canadian products and adequate protection, and is a strong advocate of high quality of goods.

New Commission Firm in Ottawa.

Mr. J. A. MacKenzie and Mr. Montague Bate have formed a new commission and brokerage firm in Ottawa, under the name of MacKenzie & Bate, with offices at 268 Sparks street. The young firm starts out with a goodly number of fine agencies, among which are the Dominion Concrete Co., Kempville, Ont.; Walkerville Match Co.; Shaw T. Nishimura, (Japan Central Tea Traders' Association); Pass Packing Co., (evaporated fruits); A. W. Banks & Co., Cleveland, (dried fruits), etc. Though only started a few weeks ago a most satisfactory business is reported.

Canners Off on a Hunting Trip.

While in Ottawa last week The Grocer met a party of gentlemen whose interests are closely identified with the grocery trade, and who were on the way to the hunting grounds of Quebec for a ten days' outing.

The party consisted of Mr. Jas. B. Campbell, of the Acme Can Co., Limited, Montreal, and Messrs. F. C. Hayner, W. B. Hayner, and Dr. Spence, of Lebanon, Ohio. The three last named gentlemen are packers of Old Colony and Lion brands of corn, which enjoy a good reputation in the central and middle States of the Union. They own 1,500 acres devoted exclusively to the cultivation of corn, and last season packed 2,500,000 cans. Mr. Campbell, who is well known to the canning trade of Canada and the United States, invited his fellow canners to a week's sport in the wilds of Canada, and so off to Thurso, Quebec, they were hieing themselves.

That the outing will be thoroughly enjoyed goes without saying, as all arrangements had been made by Mr. Campbell for guides, supplies, etc. The outing will benefit Mr. Campbell extremely, as he has for some weeks been under the weather with nervous prostration, and the rest and relief from the heavy business strain of such a concern as the Acme Can Co. will do Mr. Campbell good.

A NEW AUTOMATIC SCALE.

THE Computing Scale Co., of Canada, manufacturers of Dayton Computing Scales, are putting on the market a new automatic scale of similar design to their computing scale for butchers, which has proved such a success with the butchers and provision men of America.

The scale is handsomely finished in light blue enamel with gold trimmings. All the brass parts are triply nickel plated, and the platform is of heavy plate glass, with bevelled edges. The scale is fitted with a ball bearing swivel base which enables merchants to weigh from either side of the counter, and also to place the scale in a suitable light.

A grill or bag rest is fitted on the glass platform so as to prevent bags from upsetting. The scale is very sensitive and the computations are 16 to the pound, every computation showing in plain figures under a double magnifying lense which so enlarges the figures that they can be distinguished a number of feet away. The scale computes in figures and not in dots and dashes, and so a great advantage in making impossible the reading of wrong values. The scales are adjusted in the range of prices from 4 to 60c. per pound, with ½c. graduation in the lower prices.

These scales have received a splendid reception by merchants, and the company claims meet all the requirements of the grocer. A cut of this scale may be seen in the company's advertisement in another part of The Grocer.

J. Y. GRIFFIN EXTENDING.

A block of stock in the packing house business of J. Y. Griffin & Co., Limited, of Winnipeg, has been sold to some American capitalists, or perhaps it would be more correct to say that the capital of this company has been largely increased and that American capitalists are now interested in the company. A story to the effect that Swift & Co., of Chicago, had bought a controlling interest in the firm is given emphatic denial by Mr. Griffin, who stated some time ago to The Canadian Grocer that the rumor had perhaps gained currency by the circumstance that a Swift man is now in the employ of the company.

The addition of a considerable amount of capital to the business means that business is to be prosecuted even more vigorously than before. Extensive additions are contemplated to the Winnipeg plant and new branches of the business will be established.

It is said that some canners are already making contracts for next year's supplies of tomatoes at 30 cents a bushel. This year they paid only 25 cents, and the growers did not raise as many tomatoes as usual.

A CLEVER AD.

A clever ad in the shape of an amateur photograph was taken recently by one of E. W. Gillett Co.'s advertising men, and the title of this picture we understand is "They know a good thing." The snapshot was taken in front of what is called a "shack" in the Rocky Mountains and certainly makes a novel advertisement.

THE DOMINION FAIR AT WESTMINSTER, B.C.

NOT even in "Old Ontario," as the many former residents of that Province refer to it affectionately, could the display of fruit seen at the Dominion Fair at New Westminster be rivalled. It is no discredit to the display of fruit at the Toronto Exhibition this past summer to say that it by no means compared with the aggregation of fruit perfection seen at New Westminster last week. In fact it is doubtful if a World's Fair could out-class the exhibit. Certainly no collection of fruits grown in northern latitudes could be finer, and no collection has ever yet been made that would discount this.

The leading feature of the whole fruit exhibit was of course the "Commercial" displays. Of these there were five, two of which were from the Okanagan district, one from the upper Fraser Valley, one from the coast district and one from Vancouver Island. The exhibitors were T. W. Stirling, of Kelowa; R. M. Palmer & Son, Victoria; Thos. Earl, of Lytton; Wm. Middleton, of Vernon, and J. de C. Wetherell, of East Burnaby, near Westminster. The Royal Agricultural & Industrial Association offered five prizes and they were awarded in the order in which the exhibitors are named.

The first prize was $200 and in addition the British Columbia Fruit Growers' Association gave a handsome silver cup valued at $75. This prize went to Mr. T. W. Stirling, of Kelowna.

Apples formed a large part of each of the exhibits, and the form and coloring were perfect. No less than 45 boxes of the choicest specimens from Mr. Stirling's orchards were in his exhibit. The packing of all the exhibits left little to be desired. Indeed, as to that it is a marvel how the judge could make a selection, at least, as between the first three prize winners, all of whose displays were about the same quantity and each showed the greatest care in packing. Grapes, prunes, plums, crab apples and pears completed the selection of varieties included in the displays, it being of course too late in the season for peaches, as well as for many varieties of plums, while the famous B. C. cherries which beat those of California are entirely out of season.

Each of the five exhibits was sold in bulk to some merchant and the 85 boxes in the first prize exhibit of Mr. Stirling brought an average of over $1.50, though some were half-boxes of Lady apples, and there were eight baskets of grapes as well as the same number of crates of plums and prunes. The apples averaged $1.80 per box at the price realized. The other exhibits sold well also.

For the first time at a Dominion Exhibition were the wholesale manufacturing industries of British Columbia even fairly well represented. Naturally the holding of this event in the Province gave the best opportunity that has yet been afforded. Many very worthy displays were made both by manufacturers and wholesale men. Eastern manufacturers, too, were in some instances well represented. Of local enterprise may be mentioned Ramsay Bros. & Co., Limited, of Vancouver, and M. R. Smith & Co., Limited, of Victoria. Two biscuit and confectionery houses, Kelly, Douglas & Co., with Nabob tea and coffee. The B. C. Soap Works and the British America Paint Co., Victoria concerns controlled by Mr. W. J. Pendray. The Brackman & Ker Milling Co., Limited, of Victoria, Vancouver and New Westminster; Price Preserving Co., of Victoria. The Victoria Chemical Co., manufacturers of fertilizers, etc. The Westminster Packing Co. Chas. Milne, manufacturer's agent Vancouver. The Brunette Saw Mills box factory, New Westminster. Columbia Flour Mills Co., Limited, Enderby. Galloway & Parnell, manufacturers' agents, Vancouver.

Ramsay Bros. & Co., Limited.

Choice Empire cream sodas, manufactured by Ramsay Bros. & Co., Limited, of Vancouver, were served to all visitors to their exhibit, which faced the main entrance of the Industrial Building. It is but two years since this firm enlarged its scope by adding biscuit manufacturing to its large confectionery business. But success has attended the efforts of the enterprising brothers, and in soda biscuits as well as in all varieties of sweet biscuits and in choice fancy confectionery and chocolates, which latter they have been making for many years in Vancouver. About three years ago the firm bought out the Imperial Syrup Co., and added that line to their confectionery business. They refine none but pure cane molasses of all varieties, some of their branded goods in neat packages being Empire syrup, Manila Drips, Royal Honey Drips, etc. Maple syrup in tins and bottles is another specialty in the syrup line. advance the firm has made is in the manufacture of macaroni. vermicelli, spaghetti and noodles. But two months ago they began putting their manufacture of these goods on the market and already they have been very successful.

Dominion Exhibition—Ramsay Bros. & Company's Exhibit.

That such lines can be made here is a satisfaction in view of the condition formerly existing when all the consumption was met with imported goods.

Ramsay Bros & Co.'s fine exhibit is well illustrated by the accompanying photograph. A splendid display of their biscuits made a front, all varieties of choice chocolates and pure candy another side, a display of syrups in packages another, while the macaroni, spaghetti, and vermicelli formed the fourth side. A neat panelled railing enclosed the display and the rails and supports of this were formed by the attractive tin boxes of graham wafers made by the firm. A tiny dog stood sentinel at one corner in a yard tiled with Ramsay's dog biscuit and retreated into a kennel of the same material.

M. R. Smith & Co., Limited.

Daintily arranged in the manner of an English booth, the exhibit of M. R. Smith & Co., Limited, of Victoria, attracted many visitors to that part of the building. Occupying a space with 50 feet front, the exhibit had been made in four distinct parts. The first was a hall room tiled with Smith's Ideal dog biscuit, and a fireplace of the same biscuits completed the picture which was furnished and decorated suitably. In the next compartment was a fine display of confectionery, russet and sable chocolate creams, and the paler goods styled "Victory" by the makers. Bon bons, gross candy, in bulk, English bottled sweets, hard boiled mixtures, and the pretty gloss goods, were all tastefully arranged in original packages, with a show case containing fancy chocolates fronting the display. The biscuit branch of the firm's trade was well portrayed in the next booth, in which 20 pound tins with glass fronts, just as the goods are packed and sold, gave visitors a good idea of the way the firm puts up its fine biscuits. These varieties were arranged in a series of pyramids and tiers, with potted plants and flowers for decoration. The firm's splendid Swiss Cream Sodas flanked the fancy varieties and made the division which closed off the demonstration booth, where ladies were welcome to sit and taste the choice quality of these western manufactures.

R. M. Smith & Co., Limited, have been in the manufacturing business for many years, and have a trade as wide as the west. They seek business east to Edmonton and other Alberta points, and maintain distributing stations for their goods at Vancouver, Nelson and Calgary as well as carrying heavy stock at their factory in Victoria. Mr. Garrett Smith, of the firm, had charge of the exhibit and gave away many souvenirs.

White Swan Soap.

Enclosed by wire netting and roped off with a red white and blue cable was a miniature lake to the left of the main entrance of the Industrial Building, and swimming contentedly on the lake were two magnificent white swans which through the whole ten days of the Fair showed no signs of being weary of their comfortable quarters, for they had a neat house on a bank of fresh green sod in which they could retire from the public gaze whenever they wished. Most of the time, however, they spent lazily and gracefully wheeling back and forth on the waters of their pond. A more telling or effective trade mark could not be found, and many were the people who stopped to look at White Swan soap, because they saw the white swans. Home Rule soap, and a complete line of blueing, ammonia and other laundry accessories as made by the B. C. Soap Works, of Victoria, were also displayed. Mr. H. H. Welsh was in charge of the display and he extended to each and all the ladies the privilege of guessing how many cakes of soap were in the entire exhibit, the prize being a sewing machine. Another attraction was a Berliner graphophone which was "loaded" with some amusing wash day short-cuts in which White Swan Soap figured prominently.

Dominion Exhibition—Kelly, Douglas & Company's Exhibit.

Nabob Tea and Coffee.

In the northeast corner of the Industrial Building, Messrs. Kelly, Douglas & Co., the Vancouver wholesale grocers, had a splendid exhibit of their Nabob tea, a packet tea put up in Ceylon specially for them. Natives, in native costume brewed and served fragrant cups of this beverage, giving practical demonstration of its quality. The Nabob blend of coffee, also owned and packed by Kelly, Douglas & Co., was served to visitors all through the fair. The artistic setting and arrangement of the exhibit, of which the accompanying photograph gives a fair idea, is due to the skill and artistic taste of Mr. Arkell, of the firm's staff.

Westminster Packing Co.

British Columbia cherries, plums, strawberries, and other fruits neatly packed in tins and in glass packages, as well as packages of dried fruits, formed the display of this New Westminster Packing Co. It has been in operation but a short time, but has managed so far to make a very good start in this promising field. Premises on the river front have been equipped and with the whole Fraser valley to draw from there is a bright prospect for the new concern to put up immense quantities of choice fruit. The samples displayed left nothing to be desired in the way of well sealed tins, attractive brands on labels, etc., while the quality so far as could be judged from the transparent glass packages, would seem to be up to the rest of the details. Prominent citizens of New Westminster are endorsing the new industry and practical men are engaged in carrying on the work.

Heinz's Pickles.

A very attractive booth, next that of Nabob tea, drew the attention of all to the "57 varieties" of pickles and relishes put up by Heinz. All the varieties were displayed in a great pyramid against the wall, while round a wide counter were samples for free practical observation of their quality. Attendants drew attention to a special offer of a collection of 24 of the different varieties at a nominal exhibition price, orders being taken freely for delivery through local grocers. Messrs. Kelly, Douglas & Co., of Vancouver, are agents for British Columbia for Heinz's goods. Mr. J. J. Sloan, coast representative for the manufacturer, who makes his home in Vancouver, was in charge of the exhibit.

strate that the quality of British Columbia manufacturers even in this line is unsurpassed. Great pyramids of the famous B. & K. brand rolled oats flanked the space set apart for the exhibit, and many a comment was passed by the eastern visitors as they looked on the opened samples in all their unrivalled excellence. For it is known to some of the occasional visitors that not another brand of rolled oats compares with the B. & K. for whiteness and freedom from hulls and the black flecks so common to rolled oats. In rolled wheat, graham flour and many other lines, a most attractive exhibit was made, all manufactured at the company's mills at Victoria and New Westminster. But the leading feature remained with the breakfast cereals and the new breakfast food, which went so long un-named that it finally was given the title it now goes by—"Nemo"—"no name."

Dominion Exhibition—Fruit Exhibit.

The Brackman & Ker Milling Co. also displayed many samples of the horse, cattle and chicken food and condition powders they handle wholesale. Their trade in this line is very large their connection covering the entire Province of British Columbia and extending into Alberta, where they have a mill and elevator at Edmonton. The company is the largest in this Province engaged in handling grains and feed. They are the only manufacturers of cereals in the Province and have built a fine reputation, which had its beginning in this line with the B. & K. rolled oats, for the making of which the white oats of the lower Fraser delta lands seem to be peculiarly adapted. They are kept perfectly pure in seed and the growing of them is almost as much a specialty as the making of the breakfast cereal afterwards.

Carr's Biscuits.

These famous English goods were tastefully and prominently displayed in a booth presided over by Chas. Milne, a leading representative of reputable Old Country firms. Mr. Milne himself is well known to the trade in British Columbia and the Yukon as well as the Northwest. His display of Carr & Co.'s English biscuits was so well arranged as to receive recognition in the way of a diploma from the Exhibition Association. The possibilities of artistic display are not great with rectangular tin boxes, for all the display was in the "original packages," but by arranging them in pyramids, draping the booth with green and yellow bunting, and giving a finishing touch with maple leaves already tinted in gorgeous autumn green, gold and reds, a charming effect was produced and Mr. Milne deserved his diploma.

Canada Flakes.

Galloway & Parnell, manufacturers' agents, Vancouver, held levee day after day at the Exhibition, serving dainty crisp mouthfuls of Canada Flakes in saucers with genuine British Columbia cream and sugar. The Peterborough Cereal Co. put up this breakfast food and Galloway & Parnell have secured the western agency, which they are pushing hard. They also had an exhibit of the Economy glass jar, designed to take the place of the old-fashioned screw-top sealer. A cover of English tin, heavily coated with pure gold lacquer, seals the can by vacuum, the fruit being either cooked in the jar or put in hot after cooking. The tin pressing down drives out all air. A rubber and wax rim touches the top edge of the glass and a clip spring holds the cover on. To renew tops is as cheap as rubber rings.

Columbia Flour Mills.

That good flour is made in British Columbia was what Mr. F. V. Moffett, of Enderby, a thriving town in the Okanagan, undertook to show the people with the display from the Columbia Flouring Mills of that town. A great dome of sacks rose high above the floor and from the interior a sample sack of two pounds weight of flour were freely distributed to all and sundry, that they might take the goods home and try for themselves.

Moffett's Best, Three Star, and Drifted Snow, the latter a pastry flour, are some of the brands put up at the Enderby mill. Mr. Moffett is a very enterprising business man and has built up a large trade. His mills are in the centre of the fine wheat growing district of the Okanagan Valley, and in addition to using the local crop, large quantities of the choicest No. 1 hard wheat from Manitoba and the Northwest are imported, for so great is the demand for this flour that there is not enough wheat grown in the district to fill the orders.

BRITISH COLUMBIA NEWS

Vancouver, Oct. 19, 1905.

CONCURRENT with the announcement of the rushing of work on the extension of the V. V. & E. Railway eastward from Cloverdale, in the valley of the Fraser River, to meet the section being built west into the Similkameen, comes a very well supported rumor that the C.P.R. is taking steps to build that section of the Crow's Nest Railway, in West Kootenay, never yet undertaken, and giving direct rail connection with Nelson, instead of the long trip by steamer on the Kootenay Lake. In connection with this projected extension is the extension of the line across from Midway to the Nicola-Spence's Bridge branch, which would give a direct alternate line through to the coast via the Crow's Nest Pass, Nelson, and the Boundary district, only using that portion of the main line from Spence's Bridge to the coast, which is in the Fraser Valley. The Spence's Bridge-Nicola branch is now under construction. The building of this short line would make the trip to Nelson from the coast nearly twelve hours shorter than it is now.

Coming from Montreal, and with the addition of eastern newspaper comment of favorable nature, the news that through freight rates from Montreal to Edmonton had been materially reduced, is accepted by the wholesale trade in British Columbia as little short of a notice to quit. It is considered as the greatest blow to the trade being built up from this coast that has ever been sustained since there was any wholesale trade here. The rate is practically giving Edmonton the same rates through from the east as Calgary. For a long time wholesalers in B. C. struggled with the C.P.R. to receive an equalized rate with Winnipeg, taking Calgary as a point of division. The new rates announced are sweeping enough to make trade on the Edmonton line out of the question for B. C. coast jobbers in competition with eastern houses. If, as foreshadowed in the despatches, which are all that the trade or officials have as yet to guide them, the subject of extending these through rates to Mission Junction is being seriously discussed, there will be something doing in the transportation sections of the various coast boards of trade.

Potatoes of the Ashcroft variety will be distinctly a luxury this Winter. Despite the fact that a coast district exhibit won the potato prize at the Dominion Fair, Ashcrofts have the reputation, and the quality to back up the reputation as a first-class all round tuber. The crop this year is limited, and nearly the whole quantity has been taken into a few hands. It is stated that one broker alone cleared up $5,000 profit in turning over the stocks he had bought. The price is already quoted as high as $26 per ton, while lower mainland potatoes are going at $15, and quantity is liable to great reduction when sorting is done, as the quality is varying greatly this year. Island potatoes, as those grown on Vancouver Island, are all absorbed in Victoria as a rule, though there may be some lots shipped over to Vancouver this year. Of course the shipments to Dawson and other northern points are over for the year.

In fruit, B. C. apples are at present the leading feature of the market, not only to the entire exclusion of apples from any other part of the world, but to the overshadowing of other fruits. In the jobbing houses large stocks are being handled, and a look at the shop windows of the retail district shows how fine is the quality of the local apple. The coloring as seen in box after box is simply gorgeous, and the quality and texture when practical test is made quite equals the color, which can only be compared in richness to the glorious Autumn tints of the western foliage. Prices for apples are: Coldstreams, and other Okanagan stock, $1.75 per box; locals, 75c. to $1.50 per box. Pears, Winter varieties, 75c. to $1.25 per box. Grapes, British Columbia, $1.50; California, $1.50 to $1.75 per box. Pineapples (a small stock having arrived on the Australian steamer) $3 to $3.25 per dozen.

A trade which is capable of great expansion, and one which has had some attention from time to time by various people interested in the fishing industry, is that of shipping mild-cured and frozen salmon to Germany. A number of years ago, when the Columbia Cold Storage Co. first began operations, shipments of fresh frozen salmon were begun, and have since been continued from time to time. In cured salmon but little has been done to date. A recent visitor to Vancouver is the senior member of Klevenhausen & Co., of Bremen, Germany. Mr. Klevenhausen has been arranging for the shipment of a hundred tons of specially cured sockeye salmon and Spring salmon, to his house, and he expresses the opinion that this trade will certainly be a large one in the near future.

Several hundred cases of frozen halibut from Messrs. Wallace Bros.' plant on Skeena River arrived from the north this week for shipment in cold storage to England. The shipment of halibut by the carload in ice, to the eastern States and Eastern Canada, has been extensively carried on for years, principally by the New England Fish Co., but the shipping of the prime halibut of northern B. C. coast waters has not previously been exploited to any great extent.

The final returns from the canneries have not yet been made public, only the retort count, as the salmon pack was being put up, having been given as the sockeye run closed, but indications are as the great packs are being handled and cased up for shipment, that very few "leaks" proportionately are showing up. The percentage of leaks is sometimes large, and the leaky tins are necessarily thrown into lower grades, but the system of packing is now so perfect that the loss is small.

On the Miowera, which sailed a week ago for Australia, a large consignment of canned salmon went forward, and the steamer Jason, of the China Mutual Line, will take a large shipment to Liverpool when she sails, which will be in a few days. By rail a considerable portion of the pack has been sent to Eastern Canada.

Cohoes are now running very well on the Fraser River, and two or three of the canneries are at work packing these fish. The unprecedentedly late run of sockeye salmon has closed now.

* * *

The Board of Trade of New Westminster is opposing very strongly the suggested stopping of fishing on the Fraser River above the bridge. In former times fishing with nets, the same as used on the gulf at the mouth of the river, was permitted as far up the river as Mission Bridge, some 35 miles, but the desire to protect those fish which escape being caught at the mouth of the river and permit them to reach the spawning grounds at the head waters of the Fraser and its tributaries has led to the proposal that the fishing of salmon be prevented above the Westminster bridge.

Over 41,500,000 eggs of the sockeye salmon have been collected and are now in the Provincial hatchery at Seton Lake, according to Inspector Babcock. This is ten times as many as secured last year.

You are Risking Money And Reputation If you stock New Wheat Flour

Your trade depend on YOU to look after the quality of everything they buy at your store. If the flour is not good, they don't blame the miller—they blame YOU. They expect you to know that it is all right. It is best to make sure that the flour you stock is milled of OLD WHEAT. "ROYAL HOUSEHOLD" IS.

If wheat is not allowed to "sweat," or age, before it is ground, the sweating will be done in the flour. You know the kind of bread such flour will make.

When new wheat is ground as it comes to the mill, the flour is "soft," and will not take up water or stand up in the oven.

You will have a mighty hard time trying to explain all this to some woman who bought new wheat flour in place of "ROYAL HOUSEHOLD" at your store.

Months ago, we saw there was going to be a shortage in old wheat. We started right in to protect YOU and thousands of other grocers who depend on "ROYAL HOUSEHOLD" to please all their customers. We bought all the old wheat we needed and stored it in OUR OWN ELEVATORS, AND WE HAVE THE WHEAT.

Are you going to take chances on ruining your good trade by handling flour that may or may not prove satisfactory—or are you going to stock "ROYAL HOUSEHOLD" that you KNOW is milled of the finest old crop wheat?

Your money and your reputation are safe with "ROYAL HOUSEHOLD."

FLOUR AND CEREAL FOODS

THE STORAGE OF FLOUR.

IT would be superfluous to dwell at any length upon the important role played by cereals generally, as a means of sustenance. Their place is too well known and accepted to need of further introduction. The present day consumption of cereals probably eclipses that of any other period. It is in the natural order of things that the more the salient properties of any particular commodity are realized and studied the greater will be the demand for that article, thus it has been with the principal cereals.

Of all the cereals it will be agreed that wheat occupies the pre-eminent position and is undoubtedly the most highly esteemed of all cereals, and has, therefore, made remarkable progress in popularity and cultivation.

It was not until comparatively recent times that wheaten bread formed the staple food of the laboring classes. At the end of the 17th century it was considered in a large measure an article of luxury, and quite beyond the means of those in a humble position in life, and therefore was practically the food of the wealthy. In some parts of the North of England and Scotland wheaten bread was considered a luxury as late as the 18th century.

The origin of wheat dates back to the remote ages. It is found referred to as in cultivation in China at a period of three thousand years B.C. Samples of common wheat were found in sealed vessels in the tombs of the Egyptian kings at the time when the French army entered Egypt, and it was thought that this wheat must have been buried for several thousand years, clearly proving that it was known in cultivation in Egypt at an extremely early period.

There is no doubt that in cultivation wheat has attained a high standard of perfection, nevertheless it is generally conceded that the distribution of wheat over the globe has been by the distinct agency of man alone, as it is not found to flourish in a wild state. Other seeds may be dispersed by wind currents, and in various other ways, but wheat plants follow the course of man alone. In later ages it has been noted how that the cultivation of wheat followed the march of the Romans in much similar way to that in which the vine followed the trail of the Greeks.

With the realization of its importance as a food for man, meeting as it does, the whole requirements of his nature; its cultivation quickly became the great leading industry of the world and its extensive cultivation has marked considerable progress in agriculture and wealth of many countries. It is a scientifically proved fact that well made wheat bread and plain water is sufficient to preserve a man in a good state of health and strength. Extensive wheat growing has placed it at the present day within the reach of the humblest citizen and has made it the greatest staple food of the human race.

The conversion of wheat into flour, as we know it at the present day has been the natural outcome of the increased use of wheat and makes it easily adaptable for the general purposes of the household. It, nevertheless, is a remarkable fact how little is known of the care required in handling the flour of to-day. Machinery has been brought to a high state of perfection for the express purpose of both cleansing and purifying wheat and flour. Yet, it is a noticeable fact that not alone merchants, but millers themselves, are considerably lax in their handling of this cereal. Attention, however, is now being aroused in this very important subject and the modern miller is having his premises arranged in view of the necessary conditions for the proper preservation and maturing of his flour.

It is the "storing" of flour which is of prime importance, as it will quickly deteriorate under unsuitable conditions. To the grocer this care is of the first importance, as if improperly stored, not only will it become unfit for sale and in that way be his immediate loss, but if stored in unfavorable surroundings becomes seriously affected; and though its contamination should not apparently be sufficient to warrant its condemnation it will be clearly noticeable after being baked and the article produced will carry the contamination to an extent to become positively objectionable. The storekeeper can have little wonder, therefore, at recieving complaints from his customers, but unfortunately in such a circumstance it is too often the flour itself which is condemned, the importance of proper storing not having been appreciated; especially in these days when flour is often handled by a grocer already put up in package form, for immediate sale.

First and foremost it should be noted that flour should never be stored in a tight, close place or closely packed on shelves, where neither light nor air can gain access. Flour needs plenty of fresh, pure air and should therefore be placed in a position where it is well ventilated, it should also be in a position where daylight can easily gain entrance, but at the same time beyond the reach of the sun. The main object of this is the preservation of perfect dryness and absolute sweetness.

Many store rooms are quite unfit for the storage of flour. the conditions being such as to convey contamination rather than to exclude it. Flour will easily absorb any strong odor such as oil, onions, or the aroma of provisions. and when once affected it is a most difficult. if not impossible, thing to again cleanse it. Further, flour should never be stored in piles, one on the other, but should be so stored that the earliest arrivals will be the first ready for sale. Not only so, but if stored in this way, a heating process is started which has a most injurious effect on the flour itself and with certain grades of flour would possibly lead to germination, a most objectionable occurrence. Age in itself does not cause flour to deteriorate as long as it is kept in a dry, well ventilated and light atmosphere, it will preserve its freshness and sweetness under those conditions a great while.

Another point of equal importance. and which is considerably overlooked, is the question of temperature. Flour should never be allowed to be subject to extremes of temperature. On a cold day, therefore, the ventilation should be checked, and possibly, in extreme cold, artificial heat used, whereas in hot weather all the ventilation possible should be given to the store room, and if necessary, a current of air created by the use of a fan.

The foregoing remarks must not by any means be construed as being on the lines of "faddism." They are directions which have been absolutely proved in experience as positively necessary for the storage of so important an article of diet. All important millers are adopting schemes on these lines, and even go so far as to have air passages created right from the foundations of their walls, so as to secure perfect ventilation and the exclusion of any possibility of damp.

By following such lines as these, in a moderate way, the local storekeeper will be able to carry a good line of flour constantly in stock and so regulate his buying to suit the market fluctuations, and obtain the benefits arising from buying sufficient stock on low prices to often carry him over the high markets. In addition to which his stock will improve in condition, and he will be giving to his customer an improved quality of flour, the very best advertisement he could cultivate.

CEREAL DECORATIONS.

IF the grocer would only give himself more time for thinking over the details of his business, and how he could best improve his opportunities of increasing trade, he would find the time thus given up to thought and consideration to be time well spent, and a real investment, instead of time wasted, as it is so often supposed to be.

It is only too true that the small grocer and storekeeper very often has his hands fully occupied from morning till night, but if he were really to think for a moment he would find that he is spending possibly hours, per day, of his time in labor which a boy could be got to do equally well for a few dollars per week.

The fact that very little attention is given by the grocer to the display of his flour and cereal stocks is well worth noting. Yet, what can be done more easily and what can be more attractive than a well-displayed corner in a window of packet cereals and flour?

By the use of a little cardboard and wire these packets could be arranged to form almost any device. Bridges, mills, houses, towers, and almost any structure can be imitated for window display, and if so arranged as to utilize a row of gas jets or electric lights, forms a most striking and marvellous effect, and could not fail to be a means of attracting crowds of onlookers to the store. It goes without saying that the greater the attraction of the store the greater the success of the individual storekeeper.

THE VALUE OF WILD RICE.

THE introduction of rice as an article of diet has been known for many centuries, indeed it has been used in its wild state as the food of the Indians from time immemorial.

Probably its maturity to-day as a cultivated article is to a large extent owing to the objection to manual labor of the early Indians, for they found the wild rice ready to hand as a convenient and nutritious article of diet.

Its growth in a semi-wild state extends over vast tracts of land in South America, the conditions of soil being particularly adapted to its promulgation. It grows best in a soft, muddy, fresh water soil, where the running water is not too swift, and yet not absolutely stagnant. It will even grow and flourish, it is said, when it is submerged in a depth of water.

The harvesting of the wild rice is done almost exclusively by the Indians in the locality in which it grows, and necessitates quite an ardous labor. Yet they have grown accustomed to the work and accomplish it very successfully. It is almost impossible to utilize modern machinery for the harvesting of wild rice, owing to the perfection of its growth only being attained in watery regions, the harvesting often having to be done by two men in a boat, the one seated in the stern who pulls the plant over by the aid of a stick and gently beats the rice seed out.

As soon as the seed is gathered it is spread out in the sun for drying, this being necessary to prevent fermentation, as if stocked in any bulk while fresh it would quickly start a system of fermentation. At one time it was a custom to parch the seed in a crude open kettle, but that system is considered too primitive for present use.

The process of "Hulling" is still carried on in a large measure according to the early methods, by being beaten and exposed to the wind.

The food value of wild rice is very high and quite on a level with ordinary grain cereals. In parched whole grains of wild rice there is 11.2 per cent. of water; 14.6 per cent. of protein; 7 per cent. of fat; 72.3 per cent. of carbo-hydrates; 1.2 per cent. of ash. That the wild rice grain is nutritious is proved by the extensive use the Indians make of it as a food.

It is used in many ways according to the customs of the various Indians, but it has first to be subjected to a good deal of washing in water to remove the earthy and somewhat disagreeable natural flavor.

Wild rice is not only valuable food to man, but is also a most useful natural food for the innumerable water fowl that exist in those localities, and which besides being a commercial commodity is also valued for sport and pleasure. These water fowl are the best fattened and most highly appreciated of birds for domestic purposes. The importance of maintaining good feeding grounds for this fowl is therefore self-evident, and so it is only natural that the propagation of wild rice which constitutes such nutritious and cheap food should receive great attention.

The attempt to transport wild rice has not been altogether successful, but this, however, has been mainly due to the faulty way of shipping it for seeding purposes. Investigations have proved since that wild rice which has been thoroughly dried will not germinate, and that only seed which has been kept moist in a most careful way possible can be favorably planted. Lack of carefulness on this point is what has led to the failure in this respect.

SERIOUS DELAY IN TRANSPORT.

MONTREAL grain men express fears that they will not be able to fill contracts for Canadian wheat abroad, owing to the slow arrival of the cereal from the west. At the present time the arrivals in the port of Montreal might be roughly calculated at a million bushels per week, the larger part of which is coming in on the vessels of the Montreal Transportation Co., and like craft.

On the floor of the board of trade it was stated recently by grain men that five steamers were lying off Depot Harbor yesterday awaiting an opportunity to unload. This they were unable to do owing to the elevator there being choked up with grain for which there was not sufficient cars to move out quickly.

From now on until the close of navigation the grain men state that their bookings for shipment abroad are very heavy indeed, far greater than last year, though at the same time the shipments of wheat through the port have not as yet reached last year's figures. The total shipment of wheat from the port, from the opening of navigation to the end of the first week of October, amounts to 5,100,000 bushels, as compared with 6,500,000 for the same period of 1904. In total grain ship-

" GROCERS MAKE MONEY SELLING

ORANGE MEAT"

Some grocers do so well with this, the greatest of breakfast foods, that they drop other lines entirely. If you do not carry Orange Meat let us tell you that no purer product is on the market, because no cleaner cereal plant is in the country. Add to these truths and all-important facts, the inviting prices of Orange Meat, the stimulus of our newspaper publicity, and the drawing power of the coupons — why! you can do a trade, a profitable trade.

ments, however, the port is now far ahead of last year, owing chiefly to the large shipments of corn via Montreal, the amount being more than double what it was a year ago.

GRAIN IN SOUTH AFRICA.

WITH a population, white and colored, of over 6,000,000, South Africa's consumption of cereal foodstuffs probably exceeds 9,000,000 pounds sterling yearly, of which only about two-thirds, or something like 7,000,000 pounds, are produced in a normal year in the sub-continent. In an abnormal year, like that of 1903, one-third of the consumption or, say, 3,000,000 pounds' worth of corn and grain, require to be imported. The output of South Africa's milling industries fluctuates in sympathy with the causes affecting its agricultural productivity, for although flour and meal in normal years are largely ground from imported corn, the oversea articles, despite duties, are in greater evidence in those years when the failure of colonial crops makes necessary the import in quantity of grain and corn. To a large extent, therefore, South Africa's productivity, agricultural and industrial, in any given year, is the barometer of the demand which may be expected, not alone for all lines of grainstuffs, but for those completed articles which are the manufactures of aversea milling.

Commenting further along the same line, the British South African Gazette says that twenty milling establishments in the Transvaal are occupied principally in grinding imported corn, as the people of that country usually eat what they raise without other preparation than pounding it in a mortar.

On a rough estimate, South African mills may be assumed to be equal in a normal year to an output of 3,250,000 pounds, as an average consumption of 4,100,000 pounds, the balance having to be supplied from over sea. While South Africa is, therefore, dependent on oversea mills to the extent, in normal years, of about three-quarters of a million sterling for flour meal, the catering for its requirements is shared by a greater number of countries than is the case with the supply of corn and grain.

BREAD IN THE RETAIL STORE.

A QUESTION it would be well for the grocer to ask himself is: What is my interest in the bread trade? Sales of bread could be materially increased with a little care and cultivation on the part of the grocer. The housewife is fast losing her interest in bread baking, indeed few housewives would confess to knowing the best method for baking it. They would tell you that they relied altogether upon outside purchase for their household supply.

We cannot press too strongly on the grocer the necessity for him to sieze every opportunity for adding to the number of goods he handles, and to see that every line of goods is given equal consideration in his store. Nothing could possibly appeal more to the grocer than the handling of bread in his store. The manufacture of bread has become a real question of the adaptation of scientific principles, and the machinery necessary for its perfect manufacture calls for the making of it on a large scale. The wholesale baker, therefore, is naturally on the lookout for a good retail store who will handle the distribution of his bread and he finds in the retail grocer an avenue ready to hand for placing his bread before the public. The grocer would do well, therefore, to see that he has a nicely arranged place in his store upon which to show a good line of bread.

It would be well for him to note that bread must be kept in a dry, cool place and as far as possible air tight. Under these conditions properly baked bread will keep good for several days. It is the careless handling of bread which makes it become dry and unpalatable.

If loaves of bread are wrapped in wax paper soon after baking and then placed in a cool, dry place, they can be opened up for use and will retain a good deal of their original moisture and flavor several days after baking. The bread customer is a daily one, and it would be a good thing for the grocer to have for his customer a good palatable loaf which would bring him in touch with his store each day, thus adding another means of keeping a continual hold over his customer.

NOTES.

The Under Colonial Secretary says Cape Colony's milling industry is second only to the diamond mines in its importance, and the machinery and plant equipment has increased enormously in the past fourteen years, a feature being the displacement of water, wind and animal power by the use of gas and steam engines, the value of the machinery and plant in its 190 mills being several million dollars.

GELATINE FACTS.

GELATINE—what is it?—is the question often raised by the purchaser of this very useful article. The housewife uses it, the clerk sells it, the grocer buys it, and the commercial man handles it, but few can answer the question when asked, "what is it?" Well gelatine is really an animal glutin, pure and simple, and when properly prepared becomes a very useful article of diet. It forms a convenient base for such things as jellies and a multitude of dainty and attractive confections, and has the advantage of being a valuable nutrient, and is extremely easy of assimilation and therefore an indispensable adjunct to household economy.

Pure gelatine is transparent, usually in thin plates, of a yellowish white color, it has neither taste nor smell and is neutral to vegetable color. In contact with cold water it swells up, but does not dissolve, and will absorb from five to ten times its weight in water, according to circumstances and length of immersion.

It contains about 50 per cent. carbon, 6.6 per cent. hydrogen, 18.4 per cent. nitrogen and in pure state no sulphur. In hot water it is easily soluble, but quickly "sets" again when cooled.

Gelatine, although an animal product does not exist in the form known to the commercial world, but is obtained by treating certain animal substances, such as bones, skins, tendons, etc., with dilute hydrochloric acid, but chiefly the bones of oxen, calves and sheep. The hydrochloric acid dissolves the mineral constituents and leaves the bone cartilage; this, when boiled for a long time with water, dissolves and forms gelatine which can be purified by dissolving in hot water and precipitating by alcohol. A very pure variety is obtained from the swimming bladder of the sturgeon and similar species of fish. Most gelatine, exposed to the air, rapidly putrifies, the liquid becoming first acid, but afterwards giving off ammonia. Dry gelatine is unaltered by contact with the air.

Impure gelatine—called glue—is prepared by a simple process of boiling down hides, horns, hoofs, and cartilage, with water under pressure, and subjecting it to heat. This product, however, is employed only as an adhesive medium for such things as wood, leather, paper, etc. and is in no wise fit for food.

BISCUITS AND CONFECTIONERY

CONFECTIONERY ENTERPRISE.

VERY few storekeepers really appreciate the value of cultivating the "children's" trade. If they only stopped to consider for a moment they would see at once that to attract around themselves all the little folks of their community really means securing as a valuable asset the custom of the coming generation. How few ever pause to consider the consequences to their business of cultivating the good-will of the rising generation.

Every one of us can recall some circumstance or other in connection with our childhood in which a storekeeper is engraven on our minds either for better or worse and our estimate of the individual to-day is really our experience of him in our earliest days. An instance is recalled in which a little girl running her mother's errands was greatly mortified by the rudeness of a certain storekeeper to her, before several other persons. In after years, as she grew up she could never tolerate that man, and when she arrived at womanhood and still lived in the same neighborhood she could not be persuaded that the storekeeper was not the same insulting and inconsiderate man as he had been to her. At one time in her history that storekeeper lost an opportunity of securing an order for over one thousand dollars' worth because this grown up woman could not abide him.

The grocer of to-day has an opportunity within his reach in his "confectionery" department of securing the goodwill of the young people of his neighborhood. It is time that the grocer really waked to the importance of this department.

Many are the avenues which might be opened up to his advantage and which he is letting slip through his fingers. It is not sufficient just to purchase a few lines of confectionery and put them on the shelves and await developments.

"You can't get trade
If you sit in the shade,
And wait for business to grow."

The thing to do is to departmentalize your confectionery. Give it a special place in your store. Let it have a well defined display that will attract the youngsters, and whenever occasion arises, suggestively draw your customer's attention to that department. It need not be large, the real question is to locate it in a certain part of the store. Let it be in perfect keeping with the symmetry of the store generally, and the storekeeper will soon find that out of this little care, forethought, and investment a profit of no mean order will accrue.

When once your confectionery department is located add a few tables and chairs, and what is to hinder a judicious light refreshment being served, such as a cup of tea and a biscuit? You have the tea, coffee, cocoa—you have the cake and biscuits—why not use it as an additional attraction to your store—a paying one, too.

In England and continental cities many a grocer runs a good side issue in the form of light refreshments, making his favorite blend the leader, and at the same time educating his customers' palates in tea and coffee tasting. An instance is on record where a grocer gave up his shop parlor for this purpose and he soon had a room full every afternoon, the very time he was usually quiet in general trade, and a good revenue to boot.

His sales of sweets and confections increased as well.

A GOOD SUGGESTION.

THE retail confectioner can put up a stunning line of box goods if he so chooses, prepared exclusively from ready made candies. The idea is to buy candies in twenty-five pound boxes, or in pails, using judgment as to the quality of goods and price. Blend the different candies and find out just how much per pound a nice mixture costs you; then buy some beautiful candy boxes—such as are advertised incessantly in the Journal—pack the candy artistically in the fancy boxes, put tongs in if you like, then encase each one in a neat wrapper which bears your own business card. Tie them with handsome cords or advertising tape. The storekeeper with a sharp pencil can figure out some money-making deals from this proposition. Take it on the whole, the small confectioners know not what they can do in the way of putting up nobby goods until they really make trials at it; then they become enthusiastic and the scheme takes root and thrives. See what you can do for 19 cents, 29 cents or 39 cents in pound box stunts; or 12 cents, 14 cents or 19 cents in half-pound parcels. For pound boxes make a mixture something like this: One pound of fine bon-bons, called 60 cent goods; two pounds of 40 cent goods; three pounds of 20 cent goods— total, six pounds. Average cost of this mixture at wholesale rates about 18 cents per pound, then pound boxes, wrappers, etc. It would make a good 39 cent special. Don't you think so? This mixture is given to show what we mean about putting up box goods; there is no limit to combinations, however. Besides the box goods racket many clever things can be packed in transparent bags, such as blanched and salted peanuts, salted almonds. brittle coated popcorn, golden grain crispies, and what not. Come now, ye candy store runners, if you have decided not to make an ounce of the candy you sell, do the next best thing; establish a fancy package department and a transparent baggery. In order to make any special or semi-special business thrive it becomes necessary to blow your publicity horn with compressed air from the interior of Elysium."—Confections Journal.

LONG LOAVES.

In France and Italy are found the largest loaves of bread baked in the world. The "pipe" bread of Italy is baked in loaves two feet and three feet long, while in France the loaves are made in the shape of very long rolls four feet or five feet in length, and in many cases even six feet.

The bread of Paris is distributed almost exclusively by women, who go to the various bake-houses at half-past five in the morning and spend about an hour polishing up the loaves. After they are thoroughly cleaned of dust and grit the "bread porter" proceeds on the rounds of her customers

CANADA, A HAVEN FOR THE TOURIST

FOR some years it has been a source of wonder why the business men of Canada have not been more interested in the "tourist" question, and that they have not seen more keenly the benefit to be derived by fostering such travel.

At the meeting of the Maritime Board of Trade at Yarmouth, N.S., in August last, the subject of "Tourist Travel" was introduced by Mr. A. W. Eakins, No one present but must have been greatly improved with the large possibilities and value of cultivating this "Tourist Travel," but all could see a need of interesting the business men of each section of the country, and the importance of making a bold push to advertise the many beauty and health spots of our fair Dominion.

There is no doubt our local Government could be influenced to keep on the good work, once they saw that business men were fully awake to the importance of securing the largest "Tourist Travel" possible.

It is too evident that a great many of our business men think that anything they can do will not add to the increase in "Tourist Travel," but this is a great mistake. There is much to be done and if business men would improve their surroundings and get their respective districts in better shape, this would be a starting point.

As a rule the tourist class are not hard to please, but they seek for good hotels and, above all, they ask for clean and cheerful surroundings.

Many towns fail to attract simply because of lack of care in stores, streets, civic government and courtesy of the residents. The business men of Maine have, after years of persistent work, got the tourist travel of that State in such shape that the cash revenue runs into the millions each year.

Some sections of Nova Scotia, where the business men have taken hold and seen that needed reforms were made, and have aided in many ways the natural attractions, are now reaping a rich reward and instead of a dull season in mid-summer they find a direct flow of cash into their tills left by the stranger within their gates.

As to the Maritime Provinces, they should be the rest and play ground of many thousands of our upper Province people.

Much as The Canadian Grocer has done to make known our many advantages, still there is much more yet to be done, and once we have our business men interested along these lines then we will be on the fair road to success, and much cash that is now diverted to other countries will be circulated in the district that has made the greatest improvements.

One thing that has come under notice is how few business men express their views on this subject through the medium of the journals.

It would be a subject of great interest as well as a possible means of solving the question of how best to attract "tourists and sportsmen to Canada," if the commercial population were not only to make this matter the subject of thought and conversation, but also if they were to give candid expression to their views through the columns of the leading papers.

It is indeed a question which, if properly dealt with might lead to a development of revenue of a character that would benefit vast areas which at present are to a large extent only partially developed.

The railway systems are doing their share by the issue of interesting pamphlets, magnificently illustrated, and these in a limited way are doing their work.

There is a danger, however, that the business men of Canada, whose progress has been more by the evolution of their surrounding circumstances, overlooking the immense amount of revenue of an

A PROMINENT INDUSTRY.

AN industry that bulks largely in the industrial activity of Niagara Falls is the Myers Royal Spice Company. The head of this concern, Mr. Thomas Myers, is a gentleman whose name has been familiar to stock raisers both in Britain and the American continent for the last half century.

He was born in Otley, England, and at an early age became interested in the study of live stock, but more especially of horses, cattle and poultry. This interest was not merely that of a "fancier," but took a very practical shape, for before long he became known to stock raisers in England as the inventor of a special condiment—now well known as Myers' Royal Spice—which he claimed to be superior to anything heretofore known as a tonic for horses, cattle and poultry.

Having implicit faith in the efficacy of his preparation he resolved to make it his life work. His first move was to open an unpretentious shop in York, where he manufactured and retailed his Royal Spice. Meeting with remarkable success he soon established a large mill and this was shortly afterwards duplicated by another at Hull.

About this time Canada was attracting much attention in Great Britain as a cattle raising country and with commendable foresight Mr. Myers decided to establish a branch on this great continent. Since then the history of the Myers Royal Spice Co. in this country has been one of steady, continuous progress and expansion. The firm have met with remarkable success at national and international exhibitions, winning many medals and diplomas, among which may be mentioned the only medal awarded at St. Louis World's Fair for stock foods for horses. It is not really a stock food but a condiment to be used with food, and contains no corn, middlings, etc. Their argument is, why pay ten cents per pound for what costs only one cent? If you desire bulk for your money, take 100 pounds of middlings, or such like, and mix with 100 pounds of Myers' Spice, you will then get a much superior article than most advertised stock foods.

Their Royal Cattle Spice is used for preparing cattle for prize competitions as well as for keeping them in good ordinary condition. It is not a cheap food made simply to sell but is a condiment for improving ordinary feed, equally beneficial for horses, cattle and pigs.

Mr. Thomas Williamson,
Assistant to Vice-President, Managing Director of the Ogilvie Flour Milling Company, Montreal.

A NEW APPOINTMENT.

THE Grocer presents in this issue the portrait of Mr. Thomas Williamson, assistant to Mr. F. W. Thompson, vice-president and managing director of the Ogilvie Flour Mills Co., Limited. Mr. Williamson is a native of Sanquhar, Dumfrieshire, Scotland. He commenced his business career with the Royal Bank of Scotland, remaining four years with that institution. Coming to Canada in 1886 he entered the employ of the Bank of British North America in Montreal, which he left in 1893, entering the office of the late Mr. W. W. Ogilvie as bookkeeper. On the death of Mr. Ogilvie in 1901 a reconstruction of the business followed and Mr. Williamson was appointed secretary of the new W. W. Ogilvie Milling Co. This position he retained until the business was acquired by Mr. Chas. R. Hosmer, and Mr. F. W. Thompson, when he was sent to Winnipeg as local manager, and until a few weeks ago when he was removed to the company's head office at Montreal, and appointed assistant to the vice-president and managing-director, Mr. F. W. Thompson. Mr. Williamson's long connection with the Ogilvie Milling interests and his thorough knowledge of the details of this vast business and his long years of banking experience and financial matters were the reasons for his selection as assistant to Vice-President Thompson. The great development and growth of the Ogilvie Flour Mills Co., Limited, during the past few years have been such that even Vice-President Thompson with his well-known and characteristic capacity for work, found it necessary to secure relief from the strain, and in the appointment of Mr. Williamson the directors have chosen one who has proved himself a well-tried, hard-working, experienced and capable administrator of large and wide-reaching interests.

A FEW CARS No. 1 WINTER APPLES FOR SALE

GREEN FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

FRUIT CROP REPORT.

Depar ment of Agriculture, Ottawa

WITH the exception of very high winds over Western Ontario from the 21st to 24th, and locally elsewhere, the weather for the month of September has been very favorable for the ripening and harvesting of fruit crops. As the result of favorable weather conditions every kind of fruit has yielded to the full extent of the indications of the last two months. The aggregate of first-class Winter apples will be seriously cut down by the effects of the windstorms. Much of the fruit blown off will appear in barrels graded No. 2.

The reports of correspondents show a great diversity, as is to be expected. In the following tabulated synopsis the averages only are given. The correspondents are distributed with reference to the magnitude of the fruit interests in each district, so that the results will very fairly indicate the marketable crop.

To assist in estimating the marketable crop the fruit districts of the Dominion are divided as follows: District I.—Counties north of Lake Erie. District II.—Counties on Lake Huron and inland to York county. District III.—Lake Ontario counties north to Sharbot Lake and Georgian Bay. District IV.—Ottawa and St. Lawrence Valleys to Lake St. Peter and Southwestern Quebec. District V.—New Brunswick with Northeastern Quebec. District VI.—Hants, Kings, Annapolis and Digby counties, Nova Scotia. District VII. Nova Scotia not included in district 6. District VIII.—Prince Edward Island. District IX.—Lower mainland and islands, British Columbia. District X.—Inland valleys, British Columbia.

"F." "L." "M." and "F-C." which appear below, are abbreviations of "Failure," "Light," "Medium," and "Full Crop," respectively, as used by our correspondents in their monthly crop reports. A combination such as M.-F.C., means that about an equal number of correspondents reported "Medium" and "Full Crop."

Apples

Apples will be freer from scab but with more wormy specimens than last year. Early varieties have been marketed at good prices and few losses. Winter fruit is in excellent condition. It cannot be too strongly impressed upon shippers that the fruit should be packed as cold as possible and never allowed to touch the ground or remain unprotected in the open air.

Plums.

The weather conditions have materially favored the plum crop. In all large plum-producing sections a medium to full crop is reported. Italian prunes in British Columbia promise to be a favorite orchard fruit.

Grapes.

The good indications for grapes throughout the season have been maintained; they are being packed and shipped very rapidly. Prices and conditions have been very satisfactory, though a few carloads suffered in Winnipeg from the unseasonably warm weather of the last week in September.

Pears.

The prices for pears correspond to the condition of the crop as reported by our correspondents. Very few have been exported and the local markets have not been well supplied.

Peaches.

The situation in peaches is thus described by one of the largest wholesale dealers in Canadian fruit:

"A newspaper report emanating from Toronto at the beginning of the peach season asserted that there was an enormous crop of peaches, and, notwithstanding the official reports, this view of the crop conditions was accepted by the general public. The result has been that the public have been waiting for the cheap peaches. Sales have been much smaller than in previous years, and many people, who would have been willing to pay the not exorbitant price now asked for peaches, have waited so long that it is doubtful whether they will be supplied at all. Such reports are detrimental alike to the producer and consumer. Only a few designing dealers can gain anything by them."

The quantity of No. 2 peaches is much larger in proportion to the whole crop than usual.

A well informed correspondent in district 5 estimates the value of blueberries in that district at $60,000.

Prices.

A very wide range of prices is noticeable. As low as 75c. per barrel for apples on the trees is reported and as high as $2 per barrel. The average price was about $1.25 on the trees at the first of the month and rising until later prices are reported at $1.50 per barrel.

Growers are offered for barrelled apples in Nova Scotia $2.50 to $2.75 for Gravensteins and $3 for Ribstons, Blenheims and Kings.

Marketing.

The need of a better system of marketing fruit is shown by the fact that, notwithstanding the short supply, gluts have been reported with a shortage in other markets equally accessible. A number of correspondents report a surplus of early fruit for which, however, there was an ample market, unless for want of better distributive methods.

A correspondent from district 3, where there are many large well kept orchards, gives the following as a sample of selling orchards by the "lump:"

"The fruit grower sold the apples on the trees for $1,950 to the shipper, who packed 190 barrels of early apples and then sold the remainder on the trees for $4,000 to another dealer, who is now reported to have an offer of $4,500 for the orchard from a third dealer."

The co-operative selling associations in Western Ontario report good sales and a great increase in the economy and ease of harvesting and selling. The Forest Association has sold its entire pack (aggregating some 7,000 barrels) to a single buyer, representing an English firm.

Glasgow, Liverpool and London continue to be the favorite shipping points for Canadian fruit. Mr. W. A. MacKinnon, Canadian commercial agent at Bristol, calls attention to the advantages of shipping direct to Bristol. He concludes: "I believe that if good sound fruit is sent regularly to Bristol, for local use, the prices realized should prove entirely satisfactory, as compared with those ruling in London or Liverpool."

Spraying.

There are a few reports of apples being somewhat "russeted" as the result of spraying. Fortunately this is not considered a serious defect by buyers, who appear to look upon "russeting" as an indication of good keeping qualities.

A correspondent, writing from Chatham, Ontario, after having examined the orchards of the Chatham Fruit Growers' Association, says: "It is evident that persistent spraying, along with proper pruning, cultivation and fertilization, goes a long way towards insuring an annual crop, as the orchards of this association prove."

"The orchards that are sprayed, manured and worked have all the fruit" is the substance of many comments by correspondents.

Insects and Fungous Diseases.

The apple scab is quite prevalent, but growers are getting more confidence in spraying, and where this operation is properly performed it is no unusual thing to get 80 or 90 per cent. of the fruit clean.

Over fifteen different species of insects have been reported damaging the orchards more or less seriously. The Codlin moth is much more prevalent than last year, and with the usual Winter conditions it may be expected that next year its depredations will be still more marked. It should be borne in mind that no apple having a worm hole can be graded No. 1 or XXX under the Fruit Marks' Act. Every precaution should be taken, therefore, in the way of clearing up rubbish and keeping the rough bark off the trees and otherwise destroying the Winter protection of the larvae of this insect.

It is worthy of note that four sprayings of bordeaux mixture and paris green would have been an effective remedy for the fungous diseases and insects that commit nine-tenths of the ravages in the orchard.

Report of Dominion Fruit Inspectors at Montreal.

During the month of September a very large quantity of immature fruit was exported, the trade in this class of apples being stimulated no doubt by the high prices prevailing in England. This was nearly all marked XX, but a few lots were marked XXX or No. 1, and as a consequence shippers so marking their barrels were prosecuted under the Fruit Marks' Act; seven convictions for this crime have been reported to date.

Closely allied to this is the shipping of Winter varieties months before they should be placed in the hands of the consumers. Large quantities of Ben Davis, Stark, Baldwins and Northern Spies are already going forward.

Eight-hoop barrels are coming into common use. The quality of the staves and the finish of the make is better than in former years.

Early in the month many shipments were carefully tested and showed a temperature in the interior of the barrels from five to twenty degrees above the outside air. Even when shipped in cold storage such consignments could not be expected to reach the British markets in good order.

The shipments from Montreal aggregate to the end of September 105,000 barrels and 3,126 boxes.

Foreign Crops and Markets.

The foreign reports continue to indicate a shortage in apples in France, Belgium and Germany, as well as in Great Britain. The latest reports of the United States Department of Agriculture show no improvement in the apple crop. Everywhere it is reported light. There is likely to be heavy movement of apples from the Western and Southwester States to the large eastern markets, there not being enough in the vicinity of these to supply the home demand.

Peaches and pears are everywhere plentiful; plums and grapes are at least an average crop, so that the lack of Fall apples is not so serious a matter. It is a fair inference that when the market is clear of Fall fruit there will be an increased demand for apples.

A large quantity of cider apples is going forward from Halifax to French firms, for which a very small price is paid.

Wind Storms.

A reference was made in the August fruit crop report to the probability of September wind storms. These wind storms occurred again this year with unusual severity, and will account probably for a loss of from 10 to 20 per cent of No. 1 apples. Some correspondents report a loss of 50 per cent, of their crop, but this is probably overestimated. The loss, however, is so serious that the question of protection from wind storms becomes a very pressing one. This protection may be given partly in the form of wind-breaks of evergreen or other suitable trees, and partly in the manner of training and pruning the trees so that the wind has the least possible effect upon the trees.

A. McNEIL,
Chief, Fruit Division.

SHORT APPLE CROP.

The Georgian Bay Fruit Growers, Limited, Thornbury, Ont., in their report of the 11th October, state that the apple crop for this season is very light, and that they are unable to fill more than a tenth part of the domestic demand, the export orders being all passed by.

Green Fruits.

LOCAL markets are revealing good activity for all lines of fruit at the present time. The arrival of the date fixed for Thanksgiving is having a healthy effect upon all fruit lines, and dealers are finding all they can do to satisfy the increasing demands.

New Messina lemons are added to our list at $3.75 to $4.50.

Jamaica oranges have weakened about 50c. on our previous quotations.

Bananas are in active demand and prices continue their gradual upward tendency.

Plums are firming up materially, being now quoted at $1.75.

Apples are steadily firming, and any good fruit is ruling firm at an advance of 25c. a barrel.

Cranberries are ruling very firm at $1 per barrel advance on last week's quotations.

Vegetables.

The local vegetable market is showing a fair degree of activity but reports are somewhat behind what is usual at the present season. There is nothing of interest to note at the present moment. Prices, however, are ruling firm at previous quotations.

QUEBEC MARKETS.

Green Fruits.

Fruit market is getting stronger all around, and more business reported by the McGill street jobbers.

Bananas advanced to $1.85 to $2.25.

A car of California Tokays sold on Wednesday brought on the average $2.75 to $3.

Tomatoes still arriving in plentiful supply, the demand is good and prices range from 30c. to 40c.

Vegetables.

Business is fairly good around the markets. Jobbers say demand for onions and cauliflower is good. Owing to the onion crop this year maturing too fast they are very small, and it will take double the quantity to the bushel. Farmers are not offering them too freely and are asking $2.50 for red per bbl. Yellow are bringing $1.10 to $1.50 per 80-lb. sack. Potatoes are easier selling at 50c. per bag on track.

THE POTATO MARKET.

Cooler weather will increase the demand for potatoes. This market has had a lot of very poor Ontario stock come to hand during the past two weeks. In consequence dealers have been neglecting the Ontario grown tubers and have been paying more attention to the New Brunswick grown stock.

It is remarkable, says Mr. R. W. Hannah, of the Board of Trade Building, Toronto, that the New Brunswick growers can pay the freight charges on an 800-mile haul and still compete successfully with the Ontario growers. Of course it is all a matter of quality.

The Ontario growers will not keep their different varieties separate, but persist in shipping mixed stock, and in a year like this, when potatoes are affected with "rot," they will not sort out the rotten stock. The result is that it has to be sorted here, and the labor costs considerably more than at the loading point, besides freight has been paid on the wastrels.

LAKE OF THE WOODS MILLING CO., LIMITED

"A Remarkable Progress."

THE claim that Canada is the granary of the Empire is no vain or boastful one, and these words emblazoned in sheafs of golden grain on the Canadian arch in London during the coronation festivities of Edward VII are being verified more strongly year after year. The inexhaustible wheat fields of Manitoba and the greater Northwest Provinces are already heralded throughout the world as fields of gold, and the thousands of in-pouring emigrants from Great Britain and Northern and Eastern Europe are all accentuating by their profitable tilling of the fruitful prairie lands the value of the Great West, the land of gold and promise.

The great wheat crops of Manitoba in the early '80's already gave promise of a greater future, and to the keen and farsighted business men whose interests in the east in the milling and grain line induced them to go and grind the grain where grown is due a measure of credit for the advancement in the Prairie Province not fully realized by the general public. Among the companies which have so largely aided in making valuable the crops and fields of Manitoba and the west, and which stood in the foremost rank of the milling industries not only of Canada but of the world, is the "Lake of the Woods Milling Co., Limited," Keewatin and Portage la Prairie, Man., and whose head offices are in Montreal.

The Grocer in its present Fall issue presents to its readers a brief but interesting sketch of the commencement, growth and present advanced position of this great Canadian company, presenting also views of the two mills, and portrait of Mr. Robert Meighen, president.

The original Lake of the Woods Milling Co. was incorporated on May 21st, 1887, and opened its offices on Customs House square, Montreal, and it is interesting to note how this mammoth company has, from small beginnings, grown and expanded, until it is to-day one of the largest milling concerns in the world and possesses the largest mill in the British Empire.

When first organized the capital of the company was $500,000, in 5,000 shares of $100 each. Its offices were situated at Keewatin, Winnipeg, and Montreal, the mills being at Keewatin and having a capacity of about a thousand barrels a day. It owned no elevators of its own, a striking contrast to the enormous number it now maintains throughout the Northwest and Manitoba.

In 1889, about two years after its formation, the company was entirely re-organized, with Mr. Robert Meighen as president, Mr. Wm. A. Hastings as Montreal manager, and Mr. G. V. Hastings as general superintendent at Winnipeg, and active steps were at once taken to develop business throughout the Dominion. Elevators were acquired or built throughout the west, and it was not long before the output of the mills was unable to supply the demand for the firm's brands which, on account of their uniformity, soon obtained a steady and increasing number of users.

In the Fall of 1899 the Montreal offices and warehouse were moved to the corner of Port and Common streets, and after remaining there three or four years another move was made to the Board of Trade Building.

Mr. Robert Meighen,
President Lake of the Woods Milling Co., Limited.

About 1892 the mill at Portage la Prairie, then owned by the Portage Milling Co., was acquired, and this added about three hundred barrels a day to the output of the company. Both the Portage and Keewatin mills were added to from time to time as the demand for the brands milled by the company increased, and at the present time the company owns two mills, one at Portage la Prairie and the other at Keewatin. The Portage mill now has a capacity of 1,500 barrels a day, whilst that at Keewatin produces 4,000 barrels. A barrel factory is attached to the Keewatin mill, and although it has a capacity of 1,200 barrels a day it is generally taxed to its utmost to supply the constantly increasing demand of the mills, which comes principally from the Lower Provinces and Newfoundland, the trade in that section of the Dominion requiring that the flour be packed in barrels instead of bags, as is the case in the more western districts.

The offices of the company form one continuous chain from Pacific to Atlantic, being established in Vancouver, Winnipeg, Portage la Prairie, Keewatin, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal, Quebec, and St. John, N.B., and warehouses are maintained at Montreal, Toronto, Ottawa, and Winnipeg, besides which large stocks are always held in reserve at both the mills.

The directors of the company are: Mr. Robert Meighen, president; the Hon. Robert McKay, vice-president; Mr. Robert Reford, Mr. James Crathern, Mr. F. H. Mathewson, Mr. J. W. Pyke, Mr. R. M. Ballantyne, Mr. Abner Kingman, and Mr. W. W. Hutchison.

The officials of the company are: Mr. Robert Meighen, president; the Hon. Robert McKay, vice-president; Mr. G. V. Hastings, general manager; Mr. W. W. Hutchison, eastern manager; Mr. F. E. Bray, secretary, Mr. Robert Neilson, assistant secretary, and Major F. S. Meighen, treasurer.

The head office of the company is at Montreal.

The company has a very large and constantly growing export trade, and at the present time is making large shipments every week to the United Kingdom, Newfoundland, the Continent of Europe, South Africa, Australia, and Japan. The well-known brand of "Five Roses" flour is to be seen in the grocery stores of Canada from one end to the other, and the merits of this particular grade of flour are being persistently and judiciously advertised in all the leading newspapers in the country.

The following incident illustrates the utter dependence of Canada on the consular system of Great Britain in securing justice or straightening out entanglements with foreign Governments in regard to her shipping. Some time ago the Government of Uruguay seized the Nova Scotia sealing vessel Agnes Donohue for infringement of the fishery laws. The captain and crew were held in prison for nearly a year and were at length released on representations by the British Government.

Had Sir Wilfrid Laurier been compelled to settle with Uruguay it would have been a costly and ticklish business for Canada.

FRESH AND CURED FISH

CARE OF FISH IN RETAIL STORE.

PERHAPS no department in a general store needs such careful handling as the fish department, and yet when properly handled it is a means of creating a strong hold on the clientele of the store.

There are few housewives who do not calculate upon using fish more or less largely among their household necessities and nothing speaks more strongly as to the care and storage perfection of the store as the means of preserving in good condition the stock of fish. The storekeeper should, therefore, give this his greatest care and attention.

In many of the well ordered stores it has been found absolutely necessary to give the fish department a position entirely detached from the other goods, as otherwise it means serious deterioration to many of the lines carried in stock. The readiness with which most natural products will absorb strong aromas is well known; this being the case, the careful storekeeper should see that his fish department is given a distinct place of isolation.

The fresh fish season is one which can be used by the storekeeper as a means of maintaining a strong, and continual hold upon his customers by not only seeing that all the latest arrivals reach his store as soon as they come in season, but that he also sets himself to preserve them sweet and fresh.

It is not necessary to have a very elaborate arrangement of mirrors and marble, in fact many of the most successful fish departments are really of the simplest arrangement. In conversation with a grocer who has made his fish department a very marked success, it was learned that ordinary "slate" reservoirs were far preferable for preserving purposes than the most expensive marble, on account of the fact that the "slate" would not absorb the liquid and aroma in the manner in which marble does.

Fish packed in a slate reservoir with an abundance of ice will be preserved in a more natural condition than if stored under the same conditions in marble. Besides this, when the tank is emptied and cleared it will be found that whilst the marble tank will still have a very strong and objectionable fishy smell the slate reservoir will be considerably sweeter. This will also apply to the marble slabs so largely used in expensive fish stores' outfits. Whilst the slate does not perhaps look quite so elegant from an observer's point of view, as the marble, the former will be found far preferable in actual use. In addition to this feature it is generally conceded that a store can be more economically fitted up with slate than with marble.

The next feature which the up-to-date storekeeper would do well to make a note of is that the department should be given at least one small window to itself which can be opened from the outside, and also a good sized slanting slab should be provided, upon which can be laid samples of the fish which he has stored in his ice reservoir inside. Nothing will tend to the creating and maintaining of a good fish department like the dainty arrangement of good fresh fish for the customer's attention, it is at once suggestive, and its attractive appearance will immediately bring certain dishes to the mind of the housewife.

The salesman who understands his business knows full well the great satisfaction which a fish customer will manifest when well supplied. On the other hand nothing makes a more lastingly bad impression upon the user than having once purchased fish which did not show well in the cooking. A little care and the grocer can easily score a good one with his customer.

U. S. SALMON PRICES ADVANCE.

THE somewhat unsatisfactory state of the American salmon market since the season opened appears to be approaching an interesting stage. There appears to be no doubt from reports that have reached us that there has been a half-hearted attempt to play havoc with the market by breaking prices, particularly among eastern jobbers. It would appear, however, that with the exception of creating a feeling of distrust at buying points, and a temporary falling in value, nothing substantial has accrued from the movement.

Already prices on the U. S. markets are advancing for all good class salmon, and sellers are insisting that buyers agree to include a percentage of tails in their orders. The following is extracted from a report of prominent fishing men at Chicago, as to the real state of the situation.

The advance referred to was announced in a communication received from the Deming & Gould Co., of Chicago, who stated that they had been instructed by the Pacific American Fisheries Co. to raise prices on sockeye salmon to $1.40 for tails, $1.60 for flats and $1.05 for half-pounds, the advance to take effect immediately. In announcing this action, it is stated :

"The shortage of high grade Columbia River chinooks, coupled with the comparatively short pack of sockeyes, has greatly stimulated the demand for the latter. Fully two-thirds of the sockeye pack has already been sold; or, in other words, out of a pack of about 760,000 cases, not to exceed 250,000 remain in the hands of packers. There is sure to be a short pack next year, and prices for 1906 will be on a higher basis; we therefore confidently predict that present prices will not only be maintained, but that there will be a still further advance before prices are named on next year's pack.

"Our sales of cohoes are the largest in the history of our business. The distribution of red Alaska has been on a large scale. Spots have been practically all sold, and few, if any, futures will remain in the hands of packers. This applies to all packers, both large and small. The canneries we represent will not have a surplus to exceed 2,000 cases. There will not be enough medium reds packed to cause even a ripple.

"The total pack of Alaska chums and pinks will not exceed 150,000 cases. The pack of humpbacks on Puget Sound was about 80,000 cases. No canneryman on Puget Sound will be foolish enough to pack chums this season unless there is a material advance on low grade fish, for even at 70c. a dozen there is no profit in the business. Salmon prices have hit bottom and an advancing market is now assured."

The Pacific American Fisheries Co., according to a report current here, controls about 50,000 to 75,000 of the 350,000 cases of sockeyes said to remain out of this season's Puget Sound pack, and its action in advancing prices, therefore, is expected to have a pronounced influence upon the general market, especially in view of reports that it stands ready to buy up any weak holdings at full prices.

BRITISH COLUMBIA SALMON.

The salmon harvest of British Columbia is of sufficient importance to warrant every reasonable effort that can be put forth to secure a perpetual supply. The fact that these fish spawn but once and die on their spawning beds in the shallow streams increases the danger of depletion through destructive fishing methods. If during any "run" there is not a sufficient supply of ova deposited in the shallow rapids there must be a lean season four years later, when the fish of that year return to complete their life history. Just now there is a regular succession of three comparatively lean years and one abundant year. Such conditions tend naturally to perpetuate themselves, for the abundant year is marked by the escape of a large number of salmon to the spawning beds. The great shoals of fry make their way to the sea, and return matured four years later, continuing the succession of the abundant year. But injudicious or destructive fishing during any one year might institute a quadrennial failure of the run. We may find at any time a recognized year of failure instead of the year of abundance. The first essential of a good run is a supply of ova on the spawning beds or in the artificial hatcheries. The next essential is the safe journey of the fry to salt water.

The use of trap nets militates against the natural spawning of the salmon. Under the old methods of fishing a sufficient number escaped to perpetuate an abundant supply. But in proportion as the traps are destructive they lessen the quantity of spawn deposited. Such restrictions as are necessary in this respect must be secured by international co-operation. It is unreasonable to expect Canadians to adhere exclusively to difficult methods of fishing while the Americans on their side of the straits are depleting the waters with traps. The same difficulty encountered on the great lakes is present in Juan de Fuca Straits, and all reasonable efforts should be made to secure the co-operation of the American authorities. With the escape of a supply of fish up the rivers and a protection of the shallow streams from dams and other obstructions the supply from year to year will be reasonably assured.

It is quite possible to supplement nature's efforts by the work of the hatcheries.

NOTES.

The net fishermen in the neighborhood of Charlottetown, P.E.I., are getting a good share of the herrings which are still plentiful. The fishermen are busier now than at any other time in the season.

It is estimated the sum of $14,000,000 will be received for the salmon pack on the Pacific coast this year—$2,000,000 more than last year.

Extracts from The Business Magazine

OCTOBER NUMBER

Pigs is Pigs.

BY ELLIS PARKER BUTLER IN AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE.

Every month the publishers of THE BUSINESS MAGAZINE will print what they consider the best short story dealing with the commercial world which has appeared in the current magazines. This month's selection is a rare good yarn, a care-reliever, a laugh-inducer, a genuine old-time funny story of the Irish persuasion. It will cheer you up, so don't omit reading it.

MIKE FLANNERY, the Westcote agent of the Interurban Express Company, leaned over the counter of the express office and shook his fist. Mr. Morehouse, angry and red, stood on the other side of the counter, trembling with rage. The argument had been long and heated, and at last Mr. Morehouse had talked himself speechless. The cause of the trouble stood on the counter between the two men. It was a soap box across the top of which were nailed a number of strips, forming a rough but serviceable cage. In it two spotted guinea-pigs were greedily eating lettuce leaves.

"Do as you loike, then!" shouted Flannery, "pay for thim an' take thim, or don't pay for thim and leave thim be. Rules is rules, Misther Morehouse, an' Mike Flannery's not goin' to be called down fer breakin' of thim."

"But, you everlastingly stupid idiot!" shouted Mr. Morehouse, madly shaking a flimsy printed book beneath the agent's nose, "can't you read it here—in your own plain printed rates? 'Pets, domestic, Franklin to Westcote, if properly boxed, twenty-five cents each.'" He threw the book on the counter in disgust. "What more do you want? Aren't they pets? Aren't they domestic? Aren't they properly boxed? What?"

Fortunes in Advertising.

BY HENRY HARRISON LEWIS IN SUCCESS.

It is almost as good as a romance to read the true story of how Gerhard Mennen, the poor German emigrant, became a mighty force in the commercial world through the force of advertising. There are also stories of how Uneeda Biscuits came to the front, besides many other interesting tales of success through advertising.

SOME day a clever artist, wise beyond his generation, will draw a new allegorical conception of Success. It will not be a scantily-clad figure of a woman with golden hair floating in space and distributing favors from a clumsy-looking cornucopia, but a gray-bearded man with spectacles and a bulging forehead scattering an infinitude of microbes shaped something like dollar marks. This will typify the inoculation of fortune by the germ theory, and will be scientific, if not pretty.

There is apparently no other way of explaining the marvellous results achieved by some men under the most ordinary circumstances. In the year 1871, for instance, a great many immigrants reached this country from Europe. Among those who worked their way across the ocean on sailing vessels was a German lad of fourteen, who was promptly swallowed in the human vortex that even then represented the metropolis of the country. The manner in which he shed the habits of his former home and began to climb the gently sloping ladder of prosperity offered him by America need not be described in detail.

Six years after his arrival, during which time he had served an apprenticeship to a druggist, and studied the profession himself, he

The Commercial Traveller—Grave Yet Gay

A MAN OF MANY PARTS.

A GENTLEMAN OF COMMERCE.

THE commercial traveler is truly a man of many parts. Who has not looked with envy on the man of seeming leisure? Dropping in upon the country storekeeper with a careless unconcerned mein, his beaming smile at once expelling all monotony and gloom.

A veritable benefactor come to dispense his gifts, and yet, withal, not too familiar.

A man of magnetic personality, his manner attraction itself, he has learned that there must be as much merit in the man himself, as in the goods he sells.

The really successful traveler is he who has friends wherever he goes, the warm and hearty handshake he gives being eagerly anticipated and always welcomed. Such is the man whom we are pleased to designate a "drummer."

He has not attained this position, however, without much previous training, and at the cost probably of years of application, in which he has proved his ability to the full and has earned the respect and confidence of his employers.

The ideal traveler is not always the man who brings back a bag full of orders on his maiden trip. The dealers may have given those first orders to get rid of him, and so end persistent interruption. The wise traveler on his first trip will strive to leave behind him an impression which will serve as a standing introduction and to create that impression he need not necessarily talk "shop." Indeed the probability is that he will discover some point of affinity between the man he is talking to and himself, and were he followed in to many of his stores we should find him indeed "a man of many parts."

The ideal traveler looks every word he speaks, his face as often as not carries the conviction of his word and his customers like dealing with him because he looks honest. He is acquainted with his goods from first to last and can explain away a seeming fault or objection so that a practised buyer is obliged to at once admit its possibility. Generally he has graduated from the lowest rung of the business ladder, a fact which accounts for his many characteristics. The knowledge which he radiates when talking of his goods indicates in itself that he has a practical inside experience and knowledge of them.

The perfect traveler is withal a true gentleman, his countenance stamps him at once as one of nature's noblemen and this fact comes in and prevents his enthusiasm over his business developing in such a manner as to be obnoxious to his customer. Whereas, there is a danger of a merely "jovial" man becoming a positive bore, such a man could never be a traveler.

The traveling man always has the interest of his customers at heart. He has worked hard to establish confidence in himself and he wisely does not intend to permit this confidence to be shaken and in this connection a good traveler will be careful not to allow his customer to overbuy himself. This is a point of vital importance not only to the customer but to the firm themselves. A retailer who is a good business man soon learns to appreciate to the full the commercial man who will advise him in his buying for his own good as well as for his employers' advantage. Such a traveler is valued by his clients at his true worth and he will often find his orders awaiting him on return journeys.

QUICK TRIP TO BOSTON.

TRAVELERS who have the privilege of calling upon the merchants of that active little railway centre in Quebec known as Farnham will recall the peculiar names of the rooms at one of the leading commercial hotels. The rooms unlike those of other Canadian hotels instead of being numbered are named after the various large cities of Canada and the United States.

Some four years ago I was selling shoe blacking extracts and other grocers' sundries for a Hamilton specialty house and Farnham was one of the towns on my list. I had never traveled through Quebec and naturally had many novel experiences and found many things different from Ontario, but this hotel was the strangest I ever came across.

Just Arrived.

After registering the clerk called a boy and said: "Show this gentleman to 'Montreal!'" Now I had just come from Montreal and didn't want to go back there again so soon, as my business there hadn't panned out as well as I had hoped it would. I therefore looked at the clerk and said: "Say, I don't want to go to 'Montreal.'"

"Why not?" I am asked. "Don't you like 'Montreal?'"

"Not particularly stuck on it," I replied.

"Well, suppose you go to 'Halifax'; will that suit you?—it's all right," the clerk answered.

"Don't know anything about Halifax, never was there, though I understand it's pretty breezy."

"You're hard to please, mister," I was curtly informed. "If 'Montreal' and 'Halifax' don't suit you the next best thing I can do is to send you to 'Boston.' Go on Jack. show the gentleman to 'Boston.'"

With that the boy took my grip and I followed him upstairs, where the conversational puzzle was solved. As we walked along the corridor I noticed in large blue and white letters the names of different cities painted on the various rooms passed. We went past 'Montreal," "Toronto" and "Detroit" and turning the corner I suddenly found myself in the vicinity of "Halifax" and "St. John," and next door to the latter place was "Boston." The name just suited me and I said to myself if this is in keeping with the reputation of the Hub, where I had spent some six years of pleasant labor, I'll be satisfied. It certainly was the cheapest and quickest trip I ever made to Boston.

The room was all right and that night though in Canada I slept peacefully in "Boston." Before retiring, however, I noticed that the call bells in "Chicago" and "New York" were kept ringing pretty freely, and I came to the conclusion that there was something doing in those large United States trade centres.

If you ever visit Farnham stop at the large hotel on the corner of the two main streets, the service is good and the pleasant clerk will annihilate space quicker than Edison or Marconi ever dreamt of. You can make a very cheap trip to all the large centres of Canada and the United States imaginable.

THE TYPICAL COMMERCIAL.

BALZAC, no doubt the closest student and portrayer of French life and character in all its phases, in his "Scenes from Provincial Life" speaking of Gaudissart, the great commercial traveler of the time of Louis Phillippe, 1830, says:

"The commercial traveler—a personage unknown to antiquity—is one of the striking figures created by the manners and customs of our present epoch. * * * The commercial traveler—is he not to the realm of ideas what our stage coaches are to men and things? He is their vehicle, he sets them going, carries them along, rubs them up with one another. Curious being! he has seen everything, knows everything and is up in all the ways of the world. * * * Jester and jolly fellow, he keeps on good terms with all political opinions and is patriotic to the bottom of his soul. A capital mimic, he knows how to put on turn and turn about, the smiles and persuasion, the satisfaction and good nature, or drop them for the normal expression of his natural man. * * * He must probe men with a glance and guess their habits, wants, and above all their solvency.

"Activity is not the least surprising quality of this human machine. Not the hawk swooping upon its prey, not the stag doubling before the huntsman and the hounds, nor the hounds themselves catching scent of the game, can be compared with him for the rapidity of his dart when he spies a commission, for the agility with which he trips up a rival and gets ahead of him, for the keenness of his scent as he noses a customer and discovers the spot where he can get off his wares."

You know the "species"—let us now look at the individual. The Grocer takes the liberty of filling in here the portrait and sketch of a member of the traveling fraternity whose physiognomy will be as readily recognized by its subscribers in Eastern Ontario, Eastern Townships and the Province of Quebec as far as the Gaspe Coast, as his hearty handshake is welcome and his cheery voice is pleasant to the hundreds of merchants the subject has had the privilege of calling upon during the years the road has known Mr. D. W. Douglas.

D. W. Douglas, or as he is better known, "Walter Douglas," is a native of Lacolle, P.Q., and spent his early years in that town. After leaving school he entered the employ of J. A. McPherson, grocer, St. Johns, with whom he remained four years acquiring a thorough training and at the same time a love for the grocery trade, despite its long hours and hard work. In 1874 he entered into the grocery business with his father, Robert Douglas, remaining until 1889. From 1889 to 1892 Mr. Douglas was engaged in the canning business in St. Johns, P. Q. Finding that the canning business was unprofitable he sold out and accepted the position of eastern representative of E. W. Gillett Co., Limited, and from 1901 to January, 1905, he strenuously advocated the merits of Royal Yeast and Gillett's lye. After representing the well known spice, coffee and tea house of S. H. Ewing & Sons, Montreal, until September of this year, he severed his connection with that firm and is now back to his old love the out and out straight grocery trade. Mr. Douglas' territory is part of the Eastern Townships and as he knows every foot of the territory and can call almost every merchant by his first name, he will no doubt secure a share of the trade of the Townships.

Among the traveling fraternity Walter Douglas enjoys a good reputation, untainted by jealousy. His genial smile, hearty grip, the inexhaustible fund of anecdotes, particularly his tales of the "habitant," his readiness in either French or English, make him particularly welcome in this bi-lingual section. The Grocer quotes in conclusion with apologies to the shade of Balzac for the slight change in quotation:

"All things to all men he knows how to accost a banker like a capitalist, a magistrate like a functionary, a royalist with busy and monarchial sentiments, a 'bourgeois' as one of themselves. In short, wherever he is, he is just what he ought to be," and that is a typical commercial traveler and capital salesman, and withal a good friend in need and deed.

THE HARDEST PROPOSITION.

HAVING been asked by The Canadian Grocer to discuss some of my experiences as a canvasser, I have graciously consented to furnish that well known family journal with a few extracts from my "Personal Memoirs," which will be published after my decease.

It seems to me that I have always been up against hard propositions. In early boyhood I sold stamps to make spending money. My fine collection delighted the youthful mind and I had many offers of marbles, peanuts, tops and other treasures, in exchange. But money was tight. It was very seldom that my companions appeared to be in funds, and my harvests were few and far between. I thought I had a hard row to hoe.

As time went by I obtained the local agency for a book about the world, or something like that, on which I could make "$3.00 a day sure." But I met with constant discouragement and found it a hard job to dispose of my stock. Then I went to college. Hearing that it was easy to make a year's expenses by selling "views" in the summer vacation, I heroically donned an outfit, boarded my four year old bicycle and started out to exploit the rural districts. As I pumped along the rough and dusty roads, or laboriously repaired punctures under a blazing sun, while pondering about the habit people had of setting dogs on me, I came to the conclusion that it was the worst yet. After graduating I began canvassing on behalf of a half-dead association, trying to enlist as members some of the most influential business men in the country. Say, they used me up in no time. The magic of my B. A. which I proudly flaunted on my clearly engraved visiting card was as nothing to these hard-headed merchant princes, and I don't mind confessing that I was a dismal failure.

Then a bright spot appeared on the horizon. I was offered a position as traveling salesman for a firm which was the biggest of its kind in the British Empire. This is easy, said I as I signed the contract, and I went out confident that this firm's name would command respect, even if my degree didn't. But, when I presented my card, and announced that I was representing the H—— Co., I was invariably greeted with the exclamation: "O yes! You are the brewers aren't you?" Even among the travelers whom I met, my firm was unknown to more than half the number! And that, too, in spite of the fact that it was the greatest in the Empire. What was the reason? Well, I found out when I went in to headquarters for my first Saturday. I learned that the firm had never found it necessary to advertise. They got the business without it, they said, so why spend money foolishly? I told them they should advertise in Canadian Grocer, in which case I would guarantee to increase my sales by at least a half. But they didn't see their way clear, so I began to look out for something else to do. Just between ourselves I may remark that the moment in which I received an offer from another concern was the happiest of my life.

I had been up against the hardest proposition yet. My stuff was all right, my prices were fair. I knew myself that my firm was the greatest of its kind under the Union Jack. But my customers laughed at me when I told them so. I tried my best to convince them, but they couldn't believe that a firm of such magnitude would not speak to them every week, through the pages of The Grocer.

As I quietly dropped out of the X—— Co. I vowed that I would never again travel for a firm that wouldn't advertise. What's the use?

A PROMINENT COFFEE MAN.

VERY few grocers ever think of the experience and training required by those engaged in the blending, roasting and preparation of the coffee they sell. Every grocer is more or less familiar with blended teas, and in a general sense has a fair idea of the various grades of teas required to produce a saleable article for his customers, because the selling of teas is more generally accompanied by suggestions from the tea salesmen or the result of the grocer's own experience. Grocers can, by buying the various grades of teas, in a measure, produce a good blend, but there are very few who have the knowledge to buy their coffees green, and roast and blend them satisfactorily, so the coffee blending and preparing becomes a specialty which requires years of careful study of the various grades grown, their distinctive qualities, and their blending capabilities, and the amount of roasting each particular grade requires in order to bring out their virtues.

That the consumption of coffee in Canada is on the increase is evidenced by statistics, and the expansion of the trade is due to the closer attention that is being paid to this branch of the grocery trade by importers, roasters and blenders of coffees, and particularly by certain wholesale grocers who have engaged the services of men who have made a study of the coffee business. The Grocer publishes in this issue the portrait of a gentleman who has for many years paid close attention to coffee, Mr. J. W. Maybee, present manager of the Eby, Blain & Co.'s, Limited, coffee department, Toronto. Mr. Maybee was born in Belleville, about fifty years ago. At the age of 19 he took a fancy to the life of a sailor, and for a number of years spent his time on the Great Lakes. In 1876 he joined the house of W. F. McLaughlin & Co., Chicago, one of the largest coffee houses in the west. During the nine years he was with this firm he acquired a close and intimate knowledge of coffee blending and roasting. Those who know to what an extent the citizens of the United States consume coffee will readily understand that a vast amount of work and study must have fallen to Mr. Maybee's lot while with such a large firm as McLaughlin & Co., and it was while with this firm that he gained what knowledge he modestly claims to possess.

In 1885 he returned to Canada, joining the Snow Drift Co., Limited, of Brantford, Ont., and making the coffee question a feature of his engagement. He built up a fine trade with this company during the years he was with them. Some few years ago he engaged with the Eby, Blain Co., Limited, Toronto, and has made the coffee trade of that enterprising firm a specialty, with what success those who are intimate with the facts are best able to judge. Certain it undoubtedly is that Mr. Maybee's name in connection with the growing coffee trade of Canada is a factor, and the confidence he places in the great development of the coffee trade of the future in Canada shows his enthusiasm for his particular specialty as well as stamping him a thorough optimist.

MERCHANTS have been for years in quest of an Automatic Computing Scale for their grocery departments, and have been experimenting with all kinds of new ideas, but without success.

OUR AUTOMATIC BUTCHER COMPUTING SCALE was an OVERWHELMING TRIUMPH, and we have adopted the same principle of construction in a Computing Scale for grocers' use which is bound to give the same degree of satisfaction to the grocer.

A SWIVEL BASE allows the scale to be turned to any desired position, so as to be as easily used from one side of the counter as from the other.

MARKETS AND MARKET NOTES

Ontario Markets.

GROCERIES.

Toronto, Oct. 25, 1905.

SINCE our last report there has been still further decline in the volume of trade. The activity at the present moment has fallen somewhat below what is usual at this time of the year. Trade on the street, which generally continues to increase in activity far into the Fall, has shown somewhat of a tendency to decline, although there is still fair business being done.

The retail trade generally is showing a tendency to slow off.

Canned goods reveal no new feature to report.

The sugar market is showing a fair amount of activity of supply and demand. Since our last report prices have declined ten cents all through.

Syrups and molasses are uninteresting with prices nominal.

Coffee continues in fair demand with no new feature to report.

Tea has increased in activity and good interest is manifest. Prices are somewhat fluctuating, but for all good grades of tea quotations are well maintained with an upward tendency.

Foreign dried fruits are showing great activity with markets fluctuating somewhat owing to reports from primal markets denoting uncertainty. Whilst new fruits cannot be said to be continuing firm at opening prices, yet those who know the markets speak in confidence of much firming and advancing of prices in the near future.

Rice and tapioca continue in active demand with no new feature to report.

Spices, except for a steady normal demand, are uninteresting.

Honey is in active demand with prices quoted at considerable advance over last week's quotations, and still ruling firm.

Beans are improving in demand with prices of an upward tendency.

Fresh fish has shown considerable increase in demand with present prices ruling firm.

Dried fish is inactive with prices nominal.

The grain market has somewhat slowed down with regard to trade, owing possibly to the difficulty of transit. Prices, however, are ruling one or two points higher than previous quotations.

Flour has been particularly active both for domestic and export trade, with prices ruling about ten cents lower than previous quotations.

Breakfast foods maintain their steadily improving activity with previous quotations ruling firm.

The hide market is smoothing down to a better basis and an early date will bring the market into its more normal condition.

Canned Goods—The situation in canned goods remains the same as in our last report. A steady volume of orders continues to arrive denoting an inclination to lay in future stocks at present quotations. There is no new feature of interest to report, and our previous quotations remain unchanged.

Sugar—We have to report a dull and lower market for the week with European markets showing decided weakness and prices falling as we went to press last week, the downward movement continuing until prices reached 8s. 2½d basis, f.o.b. Hamburg, registering a decline of six pence for the week. As we go to press the quotation is nominal at 8s. 3d, equal to $3.71 for 96 test centrifugal duty paid New York. It looks as if the article was gradually working to a low level, and it cannot be long now before it reaches a proper basis of value under the changed conditions which prevail. Weather reports for the continent have all been unfavorable for some time past, with water low in the streams in Western Europe, whilst in Eastern Europe many fields have been submerged and the roads are impassable for the carts to bring in roots. There has been a lack of weather suitable for the improving of quality of roots and the high expectations may not be realized. The manufacturers have come out with their first estimate for all Europe of 6,300,000 tons, which is 250,000 less than Lischt. In Canadian sugars refiners are practically out of the market and as recent receipts have been heavy they are for the time being independent of arrivals of unsold sugar. We understand that a cargo of 5,000 tons of Java now at Delaware breakwater will be ordered into store for lack of buyers.

There have been further sales of Demarara to the United Kingdom. This is practically the only sugar available for Canadian refiners at the present time, and it looks as if the latter will have to put up some kind of competition in order to secure the supply. Trading in refined sugar has been quiet and we have to report a decline of ten cents per hundred pounds in New York which was started by Arbuckle and promptly followed by other refiners. A similar decline occurred in Canadian refined on Monday last, the 23rd inst, and we revise our quotations accordingly. We quote :

Syrups and Molasses—Local demand for molasses is of an uninteresting character and previous quotations remain unchanged, but at the present moment are practically nominal. Advices from primal points denote markets as continuing steady with buyers showing inclination to await new samples before compromising themselves to large purchases.

Syrups are commanding great interest with the advance of the season. In corn syrup trade has been steadily improving for some time. During the week under review there has been distinct improvement in the maple syrup trade with a firm tendency in quotations. We quote :

Coffee—The local market has not shown any marked improvement since our last review. There continues to be a fair measure of trade but mainly for the commoner grades of coffee. Better grades have been uninteresting. Foreign reports denote a general tendency to weaken. At the close of the latest New York market the prices generally had shown a decline of ten points for the week. We quote :

Tea—The local market has been somewhat uninteresting since our last issue and business has been considerably slower. Prices, however, are ruling firm with still further tendency towards advancement. Latest reports to hand denote the London market as doing active business at firm prices, a slight advance being manifest in some cases. In Indians the offerings were somewhat heavier, mainly of good medium grades, which realized noticeably higher rates. Finest descriptions have maintained their price. In Ceylons the bidding at latest sales was distinctly active with advances being paid on practically all grades except the commonest. Medium quality teas were in great request and realized from ½ to one penny per pound advance.

Generally speaking the situation remains unchanged, with every indication of prices being well maintained up to advancing point for all medium and fine grades of tea.

Foreign Dried Fruits—Markets in these lines, whilst showing a fair amount of activity, cannot be described as particularly interesting, and there is nothing of importance to note since our last issue.

Advices from Smyrna report an advance of 1s. on sultana raisins with prices still firming. The Valencia raisin situation remains unchanged since our last issue, the situation then described practically covering the position at the present moment.

Reports from primal points denote great improvement in the weather which, if continued, will enable shipments to be made at the usual time, early in November. The abnormal fall of rain through September makes it necessary to give more time to the conditioning of the fruit. We quote :

Quebec Markets.

Montreal, Oct. 25, 1905.

GROCERIES.

AMONG the grocery jobbing trade business is, on the whole, satisfactory. Some houses which have an especially good river and coast trade have been very busy getting out their orders and preparing for last shipments before close of navigation. Orders from nearby and the general Province trade is fair. Collections are not not quite as satisfactory as might be wished.

The decline of 10c. per 100 lbs. in sugar seems to have been expected as the tendency of the New York and European markets has been downward during the past week. Scotch granulated is a factor and a few of the jobbers find it hard to resist the difference between $4.10 and $4.50 and some buying is being done. The shipment, however, is not large enough to materially effect refiners' prices.

Teas are generally firm and business fair. London and Colombo are both firm and offers through brokers are being turned down oftener than accepted. The trade from country markets shows little activity.

Molasses quiet and unchanged while corn syrups show an improved demand.

Canned goods are featureless and unchanged. Deliveries of late pack fruits and vegetables are being made by the canners.

Coffees are steady with an easier tone in some lines.

Spices unchanged and uncertain.

Fish trade shows an improvement, the colder weather being responsible for this. The demand for bulk and shell oysters is heavy. Fresh and smoked fish are selling well.

The dried fruit market is featureless and the trade are busy getting in their supplies. In the provision line trade is generally satisfactory, supplies being obtainable more readily by packers now that farmers are through harvesting and disposing of their live stock.

The demand for poultry is good on account of Thanksgiving Day this week.

Some little shading is noted in butter. Eggs are slightly firmer under strong foreign demand.

Cheese is easier, particularly for October makes.

Flour market steady and unchanged.

Feed is plentiful and prices easier.

Green fruits trade is satisfactory for the time of year. Peaches are off the market. California Tokays are arriving in good supply and selling well.

Canned Goods—Market shows no change. New canned vegetables and fruits are arriving freely with the jobbing trade. Some good sales outside of canner's combine are reported, the shading being 5c. per dozen. New pack salmon are well in store and jobbers are in a position to complete their orders. New Canadian sardines are meeting with good demand and sale and the improved style of packing is doing much to popularize Canadian pack sardines. We quote :

Sugar—Declined 10c. on Saturday in sympathy with the decline in New York and the weaker European market. Basis is now $4.50 for extra granulated. Scotch granulated is being offered at $4.10 and some good sales are reported at this figure. The drop does not seem to have stimulated extra buying on part of the jobbing trade and complacency seems to be the characteristic feature among the trade—buying as they want. Country dealers also are not placing heavier orders and buy from hand to mouth.

Syrups and Molasses—A better demand for molasses is reported by the jobbing trade this week. Country merchants are preparing to lay in their winter's supply and many of the river and shore orders are being filled. Prices show no change and none is anticipated by dealers. Holders of stocks are firm and still look for an advance. In corn syrups an improved demand is reported with prices firm. We quote:

Tea—The tone of the tea market is steady and firm. No very heavy buying is reported in any grades and only a fair general trade is reported. China greens and blacks maintain their strength but business is light, inquiries are few and stocks light. Holders are agreed upon hanging on. Ceylon blacks steady, while greens are in somewhat better demand. Firmness is characteristic in both London and Colombo. In Japans only a passing trade is noted. Prices are steady and firm. Buying by country dealers is fair in some sections, though on the whole the trade cannot be said to be flourishing. We quote:

LAST MINUTE PROVISION MARKET.

Montreal, Thursday, Oct. 26, 12.30 p.m.

BUTTER—No change. Receipts falling off. Fancy Townships, 2½c. to 23c. scarce. Good to fine, 21c. and 21½c. Choicest, 22½c.

EGGS—No change. Market steady. Export demand keeping up. Some holders asking 22c. for pickled stock. Straight gathered, 19½c. to 20c. for wholesale quantities. Select, fresh, 23c. to 24c.

CHEESE—No change. Export demand light. Quebec, 10⅞c. Townships, 11⅛c. Ontarios, 11½c. to 11⅝c; these latter scarce. Some holders are asking 11⅝c.

PROVISIONS—Market steady. Supplies plentiful for packers' requirements. Ham and bacon in good demand. Poultry picking up. Dry picked, fresh killed selling, 14c. to 15c. Ducks, 13c. to 14c., chickens, 10c. to 12c.

Foreign Dried Fruits—The foreign dried fruit market is quiet and news is scarce. Importers are busy getting in their stock of Mediterranean and other dried fruits. Figs are in the hands of the trade and the demand from the retailers is about as usual for first shipments. Grenoble walnuts are firm and held stocks are high. Filberts are easy Valencia raisins are pretty generally on the market in all grades and prices are low. The SS. Bellona, due shortly, carries from Denia 95,654 half boxes, 1,902 quarter boxes and 5,675 eighth boxes of Valencias. We quote:

Rice and Tapioca—Both dull and little trading done. Jobbers report demand about as usual, these lines varying very little at almost any time and the demand is one that cannot be increased very much as the consumption generally is one that runs evenly throughout the country. We quote:

B rice, in 10 bag lots	2 95
B rice, less than 10 bags	3 05
C rice, in 10 bag lots	2 85
C rice, in less than 10 bag lots	2 95
Tapioca	0 04

Spices—Market shows dullness due no doubt to the low prices on a number of the leading grades. Peppers are unchanged with a somewhat stronger feeling on account of the undoubted shortage of the Lampong pepper crop. Gingers are in fair demand, also Cassias Nutmegs are low and dull. Dealers report fair demand from country points for Fall orders. We quote:

Cloves, whole	0 17 0 30
Cream of tartar	0 25 0 30
Allspice	0 12 0 15
Nutmegs	0 25 0 50

Honey—Market much firmer and prices show an advance over last week's quotations. Fine comb honey has in a number of cases brought as high as 15c. White extracted is also firmer and fully 1c. to 1 1-2c. higher. Dealers report good demand setting in. We quote:

White clover, extracted tins	0 07 0 07½
" kegs	0 07½ 0 08
" comb, new	0 13 0 15
Buckwheat	0 06 0 06½

Maple Products—Maple syrup is on the quiet side and little inquiry as yet. The warm weather has to be blamed for the dullness. Maple sugar is in better demand. Some fancy brought 9c., though 8c. to 8 1-2c. is about fair ruling price. We quote:

Maple syrup, in wood, per lb	0 06 0 06½
" in large tins	0 06½ 0 07
Pure Townships sugar, per lb	0 07 0 07½
Pure Beauce County, per lb	0 08½ 0 09

Beans—The firmness in beans is being fairly general. The reports of heavy shortage in crop in the bean district is being discounted by many dealers who claim that as soon as the threshing is all done easier prices will result. In some sections farmers have not even commenced threshing. Quotations as under are ruling figures this week. We quote:

Choice prime beans	1 50	1 65
Lower grades	1 40	1 50

Evaporated Apples—Business is restricted on account of the high prices asked by evaporators and shippers in the west. It was reported by one large buyer this week that he had been offered apples at less than last week's quotation. Winter varieties are held at 7 3-4c. to 8c. From advices of one of the largest dealers here his instructions were to hold firm at 8c. and even at that figure it was doubtful whether he could secure any quantity. In small lots 8c. to 8 1-2c. appears to be the market.

Fish—Business reported improved this week. Fresh fish of all kinds are in good demand and supplies coming in more freely. Both dry and green cod are scarce and prices held firm. New salt herring are in fair demand, as also are smoked fish. Finnan haddies are selling well. Bulk oysters in good demand. Malpaque shell oysters are easier under good inquiry. The superior quality of Canadian shell oysters is being appreciated by lovers of this luscious sea fruit. We quote:

Fresh bulk oysters, standards	1 40

Flour—There has been a better feeling this week in the flour market and the demand both locally and from outside points as well as export is much improved. The approach of the close of navigation has had a good deal to do with stimulating trade. Prices, however, are unchanged. Receipts in comparison with same last year are 24,000 barrels in excess. We quote:

Winter wheat patents	4 90	5 00
Straight rollers	4 60	4 70

Manitoba spring wheat patents		5 00
" strong bakers		4 70
" bakers		4 10

Rolled Oats—More activity is reported in the rolled oats trade, though prices remain unchanged. Receipts are heavier and the export demand improved. Dealers look for a better trade in the near future when winter stocks are being looked after by the trade. We quote:

Fine oatmeal, bags	2 50	2 60
Standard oatmeal, bags	2 55	2 60

" bbls, on track		4 85
" 90-lb. bags	2 40	2 45
" 80-lb. bags	2 10	2 20

Hay—There is a very heavy stock of hay stored in the city at present. No 1 and good No. 2 is, however, very scarce and the local demand for same good. Of the poorer qualities there is an over supply and prices are nominal. Complaints are still common of shortage of ocean freight space and many shippers are using the American ports. We quote:

No. 1	8 50	9 00
" 2	7 50	8 50
Clover mixed	6 00	6 50
Clover, pink		6 00

Feed—There is a good supply of bran available, Ontario being particularly plentiful. Several cars of Ontario were sold on track at $15 in bulk, equal to $16.50 in bags. Some cars of Manitoba bran brought $15 per ton, two small lots, $16.50 to $17.

N. B. Markets.

St. John, N.B., Oct. 24, 1905.

THIS has been a somewhat broken week, with the visit of the Prince and the Thanksgiving holiday. Business, however, is good, as, of course, it must be at this season unless something is radically wrong. There are not, however, the same reasons for Thanksgiving as last year, not but that there are abundant reasons for the observance of the day. Such reasons, in fact, as should make it better observed than is usual. It means little besides a holiday to very many. In grocery lines last year the trade, indeed, felt there were exceedingly good reason for Thanksgiving; seldom had there been such a year. Just now it is very different. The sugar situation does not improve. In flour, canned goods and other lines business has been very unsatisfactory.

Oil—In burning oil there is an increased demand; prices continue low though market keeps quite firm at the slight advance. In lubricating oil demand is quite good for the season, but this is a rather quiet time. In paint oils linseed is low, though it is doubtful if the extreme low price of last year is again quoted. In turpentine prices are extreme. It is doubtful if as high prices were ever quoted. The price of cod oil is rather higher. This line has surprised the trade, prices being much higher than was expected and very little to be obtained. It is said it is being bought for the American market.

Salt — A large cargo of Liverpool coarse salt was landed this week. It is thought there will not be another shipment received till the first Winter port steamer arrives in about three weeks. Demand is now somewhat over, and it is said the Winter imports will not be large. Price is firmly held.

Canned Goods—The situation in vegetables does not improve. It is difficult to quote a price. There is little doubt some goods are being sold less than cost. The idea seems to be to unsettle the market. Some houses simply will not meet prices quoted. They will make a small profit or remain out. While they find but a light business they are able to turn over some goods. In fruits the situation is somewhat better. Salmon is held at the regular figure and is the most satisfactory line.

Green Fruits—In apples it difficult to get really good fruit. While some Gravensteins are offered they are of but fair quality and are higher. There has been quite a quantity of Ontario apples bought for this market. There is quite a little cheap fruit offered. In oranges there is little outside of Jamaicas, and demand is slow. Lemons keep high. Bananas are not so freely sold. Ontario grapes are quite plenty, though shipments are about over.

Dried Fruit—New Valencia and Malaga loose raisins are to hand, also Malaga layers. Prices are low, particularly when compared with California raisins, of which the quantity sold has been small and chiefly confined to seeded. There have been some seeded Malagas sold, but buyers were late placing orders and very few could be obtained. New prunes, apricots and peaches are here. Prices show considerable advance since these goods were bought. Currants quite high; the high price resulting in quite a quantity of old fruit being imported. New figs are quoted low. Peels about as usual. Evaporated apples quite firm. Onions unchanged; market well supplied.

Sugar—The situation is unsatisfactory. In barrel sugar there is no change, but market is weak. In bag sugar it is rather difficult to quote a figure. The guild are fighting the imported sugars; they are bound those outside shall not reap the advantage of their figures.

Molasses — Trade is somewhat quiet, prices unchanged. While stock of Porto Rico is large there is little else here.

Fish—Prices are high. There is little in fresh fish except cod and haddock. Dry cod and pickled herring very firm. New smoked herring, while bringing rather better price than did the cod, will likely be lower.

Flour Feed and Meal— Flour unchanged; a fair business. Feed has some demand at even figures. Oats, while higher than new were quoted earlier, are still quite low. Oatmeal is high; much higher than oats. Cornmeal easier. Beans unsettled, the market tending higher. Barley is quoted at quite full figures.

Provisions—There is a fair sale for barrel pork; prices are a shade easier. It is very difficult to get domestic stuff. In beef only a fair business; American chiefly sold. There continues to be a large quantity of American pure lard imported; Canadian very high and difficult to get. Refined lard has improved in demand. In fresh meats beef is somewhat dull and rather easier. Veal is but little seen. Mutton is firmer but still low. Lamb keeps high. Pork more freely received and holds firm. We quote:

Mess pork, per bbl	$15 00	$15 50
Clear pork, "	18 00	20 00
Plate beef, "	14 00	15 00
Domestic beef, per lb	0 05	0 07

" " pails, "	0 10½	0 11
Refined lard, tubs	0 08	0 08
" " pails	0 08½	0 09

Butter—Supply is small. Good butter is in demand at improved prices. We quote :

Creamery butter	0 23	0 25
Best dairy butter	0 19	0 21
Good dairy tubs	0 17	0 19
Fair "	0 16	0 18

Eggs—Supply light. There is a steady sale at rather higher figures. We quote:

Eggs, henmery	0 24	0 26
" case stock	0 19	0 21

Cheese—Stocks are small and full prices are asked. The output in this Province has been small. For local business twins are demanded. We quote :

Cheese, per lb. 0 12½ 0 13

N. S. Markets.

Oct. 24, 1905.

THE apple market in Nova Scotia may be said to be exceedingly active just at the present time. The shipments of apples received from points in the fruit growing belts of the Province are not nearly equal to the local demand, and in the hundreds of barrels that have come to the city only about one in every ten can be classed as first-class. Notwithstanding the staggering price of $4 per barrel, choice No. 1 Gravensteins are hard to get. The price of apples this Autumn is a stickler to the local consumer, the dealers quoting $2.50 for fair No. 2's and $3 for choice barrels of the same grade. Culls and cracks sold at aution, and in many cases containing mixed varieties, fetch as high as $2, $2.10, and $2.25 per barrel. These figures are far and above former years.

Late reports from the Valley say that since the middle of August the weather has been the right kind for the proper development of fruit, and the yield of apples has been far beyond the expectation of the fruit grower who feared a failure in this crop. He is gathering as much fruit again as he hoped for. The apples are of fine quality for the most part, many measuring eleven inches in circumference.

The first large shipment of apples of the season from this port was sent to the British market this week, when the Furness liner Florence sailed for London with 20,155 barrels.

Another report from the Annapolis Valley says that despite the dry weather, so frequently complained of, there has been an ample crop of hay, grain, vegetables and different kinds of produce. This is probably due to the abundant rains which so thoroughly soaked the ground during the early Spring.

Butter and Eggs—The butter market shows little improvement. Receipts are still far below the average, and the present outlook gives no hope for relief. Creamery prints are firm at 24c. Choice dairy butter is scarce. There is a lot of butter on the market, but it is not first-class. During the week a large shipment of small tubs was received from Antigonish, and it was eagerly bought up at 20c., one dealer taking the whole lot (about 60 tubs averaging 12 pounds) from a commission house, and offering to take as much more at the same price if it was available. Some small lots brought to the city by farmers were soon disposed of at 24c. This butter was of good quality and freshly churned. Many persons here wonder why more Ontario butter is not brought to Halifax. Some of those who have used it say that the quality is just as good as ours, and that it could be sold cheaper than the local butter. The Nova Scotia factories are not making much butter just now.

Eggs—Are firm at about 21c. for Prince Edward Island stock. There is not much doing in eggs just now, but higher prices are predicted before very long. At retail Nova Scotia fresh laid eggs are quoted at 30c. Island dealers expect to be shipping limed eggs to the Montreal market very shortly.

Cheese—Keeps on advancing and primes of September make are selling at 13c. Stocks of cheese held here are very light.

Flour and Feed—The price of flour remains pretty steady. There is a fairly good demand for Ontario flour here, and Manitoba is selling slowly just at present. There is said to be a scarcity of oats at Prince Edward Island, and this has helped to maintain prices. Ontario people are quoting oats at 44c., and Prince Edward Island dealers 45c.

The P. & B. liner Carribie, which arrived during the week from Bermuda, landed 14,000 bags of sugar here for the local refineries.

The brig Blenheim, from Farjardo, P.R., also landed at this port 358 puncheons, 34 tierces, and 41 barrels of molasses.

Manitoba Markets

(Market quotations corrected by telegraph up to 12 a.m. Thursday, Oct. 26th, 1905.)

BUSINESS continues very active in almost all branches of the wholesale grocery trade, the inquiry for Christmas goods for later delivery having given a renewed impetus to the market. A great improvement is already reported in the state of country collections, and the wholesale trade are much encouraged by the determined attude of the Western Retail Association, which evidently means business in its dealings with the credit problem. The enforcement of a cash system during the Winter months will do much to keep the prosperity of the west on a sound basis.

As was noted last week in our "Last Minute Manitoba Markets," there has been a decline of 30c. per cwt. in all sugars delivered to points between Moose Jaw and the B. C. boundary. As there has been no decline in points east of Moose Jaw the change is generally attributed to the competition of the beet sugar refinery at Raymond, Alta. The reduction was announced, of course, by the B. C. refinery. Since this decline in sugar there have been no important changes of any kind in the local wholesale grocery market. New prices are announced on peels and these quotations will be found below under "Candied Peels." New prices will also be found under "Dried Fruits" of new Sultana raisins and new prunes. New almonds and walnuts are on the market and in good demand for the Christmas trade. A reduction in woodenware will be noted below. Eddy's "Silent" matches have been reduced to $2.05 per case.

Canned Goods– There has been no new developments in the local canned goods situation since our last report. The new salmon is practically all on the market now and it is moving fast. As noted last week, strawberries are very scarce. One or two houses in Winnipeg are sold out already, and are finding difficulty in getting new supplies. We quote :

Sugar—As noted last week in our telegraphic corrections sugar declined 30c. for all points from Moose Jaw west to the B. C. boundary. As this reduction was announced by the B. C. refinery, and as it has been confined to these western points, the inference is that the causes are local and that this change does not necessarily imply an immediate likelihood of lower prices for points farther east. The decline is attributed to the competition of the beet sugar refinery at Raymond. Subject to possible late changes recorded in our "Last Minute Markets," we quote:

HINTS TO BUYERS.

The Eby, Blain Co., Limited, are offering some very choice lobsters, 1 lb. flats, under their well-known Anchor brand.

Minto Bros., importers of Melagama tea, are daily receiving new Ceylon, Indian and Japan teas which they were lucky to purchase before the advance. For purity, strength and flavor and price they claim these are unexcelled.

The Eby, Blain Co., Limited, are offering a snap in Sair dates, 1904 crop.

Laporte, Martin & Cie., Montreal, are in receipt of shipment of 90 barrels medium No. 1 quality cod, from Gaspesie and Nova Scotia, which they are offering at advantageous prices.

Messrs. L. Chaput, Fils & Cie. report the arrival of three carloads of Canadian sardines, Brunswick brand, packed in the new sanitary tins, and buyers are requested to secure their prices before buying elsewhere.

Buyers of new season's fruits, etc., will do well to consult the advertisement of the Eby, Blain Co., Limited, in this issue.

A complete assortment of new Valencia raisins, French prunes in 28 and 56 lb. boxes, Califorbia prunes, apricots, peaches and pears is in store with Laporte, Martin & Co., Montreal. Grocers desiring to secure their Winter supply will find value in writing Laporte, Martin & Cie.

Messrs. L. Chaput, Fils & Cie. are in receipt of 150 packages of the celebrated Gonzalez, Staub & Co. Cognac, a shipment consisting of quarter casks, octaves and half octaves. Since its introduction on the Canadian market by Messrs. L. Chaput, Fils & Cie., Gonzalez, Staub & Co.'s Cognac has worked itself into a favorite position in the demands of the trade.

With the arrival of luscious oysters the demand for Sauterne wines will revive. Messrs. Laporte, Martin & Cie. Montreal, call buyers' attention to the special brands controlled by them on the Canadian market: Sauterne Lecomte, Morel & Cie., and Vigneau & Camboux. These wines are desirable accompaniments to Canada's famous Malpecque oysters.

Laporte, Martin & Cie., Montreal, are offering finest Malaga raisins at interesting prices.

S. J. Major, Limited, Ottawa, report arrival of carload of brooms, which are claimed best value ever offered for the money. Also large consignment of sardines, all sizes and styles of tins. Some of these are special lines and are meeting with good call from the trade.

BUSINESS PERSONALS.

CLIENTS and customers of G. F. & J. Galt, Winnipeg, Man., will learn with regret that Mr. A. L. McGregor, traveler for the above firm, passed away at his residence, 296 Gertrude avenue, from an attack of typhoid fever. His sterling and honorable methods of doing business and his many manly qualities had endeared him to both his firm and their staff, and also to his many customers.

A very pleasant event took place in the offices of Messrs. L. Chaput, Fils & Cie., wholesale grocers, Montreal, last Saturday afternoon, when Mr. Jos. W. Deziel, assistant accountant, was presented with a cabinet of cutlery. The occasion was the approaching marriage of Mr. Deziel to Miss Cartier, daughter of Dr. Cartier, of St. Madeline, Que., on Wednesday of this week. The presentation was made by Messrs. Major and Leveiller, on behalf of the employes and Mr. Deziel's fellow workers. Mr. Deziel entered the employ of L. Chaput, Fils & Cie. September 1st, 1888, as invoice clerk, and by his ability and close and conscientious attention to his duties attainted to the position of assistant accountant. Mr. Deziel is deservedly popular with his employers and fellow workers and The Grocer joins Messrs. L. Chaput, Fils & Cie. in wishing Mr. and Mrs. Deziel a pleasant journey through life.

Quebec city has no more worthy exponent in the flour and grain trade than the firm of C. A. Paradis, which bids fair to increase its present enviable position in the trade. Their aim is to keep in constant touch with the various sources of supply and their buying facilities cannot be excelled. Large warehouses of he most convenient type, in Dalhousie street, the centre of the trade, facilitate ready distribution. Mr. C. A. Paradis, though comparatively a young man, has by persistent steady effort together with marked business ability and keen judgment attained a prominent position among the leading merchants of his city. He has had a wide and varied experience in the trade and is thoroughly acquainted with its requirements. In launching a business of his own there is every reason to believe that he will meet with marked success and his future in the trade will be watched with interest.

The Montreal Pork Packing Co., Limited.

MONTREAL PORK PACKING CO., LIMITED.

THE meat curing and packing industry of Canada during the past decade has made enormous strides and curing and packing establishments are springing up in different parts of the country. The reputation the Canadian bacon and ham, as well as beef products, have obtained on the English market, as well as through Australia and South Africa, has led to the creation of establishments to cater to the expanding and rapidly developing trade. In 1891 the value of the output was $5,264,143, while in 1901 it had developed to $22,270,984, and to-day it is nearly three times greater.

There are in Canada no less than fifty-seven establishments engaged in the meat packing and curing business, that is taking in all establishments of more than five employes. That the expansion of the meat packing and curing industry of Canada is of great value to the country, particularly to the farming community, goes without saying, and millions of dollars are annually paid out to farmers and ranchers for stock.

There are quite a number of pork and beef packing establishments in the city of Montreal, some of which have been established a number of years and are doing a very large local as well as export trade. The subsidizing of a line of steamers by the Canadian Government to South Africa, with bi-monthly sailings, has stimulated this particular branch of the packing industry very materially.

Last Spring a new company was formed and entitled the Montreal Packing Co., Limited, and a complete packing plant established at Mill street, Point St. Charles, contiguous to the abattoirs and stock yards. A representative of The Grocer paid a visit last week to the plant and was shown over the premises by Mr. C. E. Allen, sales manager. We publish in this issue a view of the packing house and several interior views. From Mr. Allen it was learned that the capacity of the plant is 3,000 hogs per week. A staff of 150 is employed in the various offices and departments, which in view of the fact that the company has only been in operation for seven months, speaks volumes for the enterprise and push of the officials. The main building is 150 feet square, with five stories. A complete up-to-date lard room, storage room, beef room, cutting room, and refrigerating plant has been installed. The system of refrigeration employed is the Linde-British Refrigerator System, an improvement on the old time direct expansion.

The Montreal Packing Co. sell their products direct to the trade only, and in the city of Montreal have a thorough system of delivery wagons, twelve of these having already been required, and with the expansion of the company's business at its present rate, five times this number will be required in a short time. The brand for the home market is "Corona," while for the export trade "M. P." is used and this mark is already known in South Africa and throughout the United Kingdom.

The officials of the company are: President, R. M. Ballantyne; vice-president, P. L. McLagan; general manager, C. W. Bowman; sales manager, C. E. Allen; superintendent, R. E. Lunham.

Mr. Bowman, before taking hold of the Montreal Packing Co., was for 18 years assistant superintendent of the Ingersoll Packing Co., Ingersoll, Ont., and is one of the most efficient and best posted men connected with the packing industry, and has surrounded himself with a most efficient staff of assistants. Mr. C. E. Allen, sales manager, was for many years in the employ of the Armour Company, and Mr. Lunham superintendent, has had long experience in packing houses in England, Ireland and Canada.

With the undoubted abilities and energies of the staff, and the thorough equipment of the plant, there is not a question of doubt but what an enormous business both locally and export will be obtained by the Montreal Packing Co.

IN MEMORIAM.

IT is with a feeling of profound regret that The Grocer fulfills the painful duty of acquainting its readers with the decease of one of the oldest merchants in the city of Toronto, and certainly the oldest member of the wholesale grocery trade, the late Mr. W. Ince.

Mr. Ince was a well known figure on Front street right up to the very last, and quite recently it was remarked by those who saw him cross the street that he had more of the agility of youth than the marks of age. His end came somewhat suddenly ; it is but two weeks since his last illness overtook him, as the result of which he passed away at midnight at his home at 94 Prince Arthur avenue. Mr. Ince had been a resident of Toronto for some seventy years and was senior member of the well-known wholesale grocery firm of Perkins, Ince & Co.

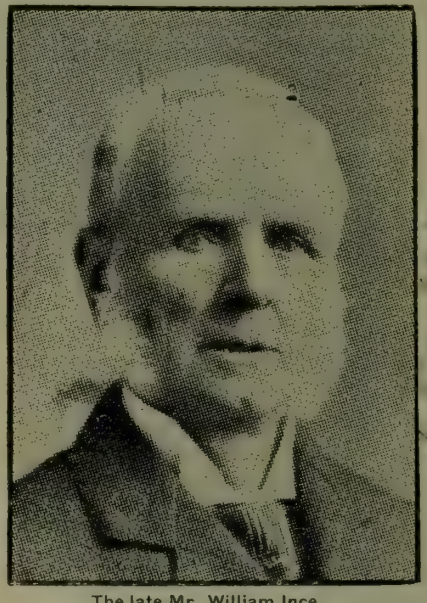
He bore no small share in the growth of this city and by perseverance, integrity, and natural ability raised himself to a high position as one of Toronto's most respected citizens and business men. He was of a most genial and kindly disposition, and his tales of early Toronto were well worth hearing. Mr. Ince was present as a boy at the distribution of weapons at the City Hall when the rebellion broke out, and remembered all the incidents of that stormy time with the greatest distinctness. He was also a spectator of the execution of Lount and Matthews.

Mr. Ince was born in Queen's county, Ireland, in 1826. When he was only four years old his parents emigrated to Canada and first settled at Coteau, but in 1835 they moved to Toronto, where Mr. Ince received his education. In 1838 a commercial career was determined upon, and he entered the business house of Mr. George Moore, which was situated on King street. He early showed a great aptitude and an indefatigable industry, and stood high in his employer's confidence. Here he remained until the death of Mr. Moore, in 1842, necessitated the winding up of the estate, which was done by Mr. Ince though only sixteen years of age. As soon as his work with regard to Mr. Moore's estate was finished he took the management of a wholesale grocery business conducted by Mr. Cameron in the St. Lawrence Market, and remained with him till 1845.

He next entered the firm of Perkins & Company, whose premises were situated at the corner of King and Jordan streets, but who were at the time building the present warehouse which was the first building to be erected on the south side of Front street.

In 1856 Mr. Ince became a partner, and in 1874 Mr. F. Perkins retired, the business being subsequently conducted by Mr. G. Perkins, Mr. Ince, and Mr. J. W. Young, Mr. Perkins' brother-in-law, the firm assuming the title of Perkins, Ince & Company.

The funeral took place on Monday last, the 23rd inst., with a full choral service at Holy Trinity Church, Toronto. Every wholesale grocery house of Front street was represented at the funeral as well as all the leading brokerage houses. There were also many representatives from outside points, prominent amongst whom were Mr. G. E. Bristol, of Lucas, Steele & Bristol, Hamilton, and Mr. A. Turner, of J. Turner & Co., Hamilton. There were also some forty members of the Board of Trade, who came in a body as a mark of respect from that association.



The late Mr. William Ince.

FROST ON SHOW WINDOWS.

DURING Winter weather many shopkeepers experience more or less difficulty in keeping their show windows free from the ice that in low temperature tends to defeat the object of the display.

No doubt all of the devices for keeping glass clear of ice, published from time to time in the journals, have received a fair test, with varying satisfaction. A writer in one of the foreign journals, who has experienced the rigors of high latitudes, insists that none of the ordinary schemes are of much use, and that the only certain remedy for the opaque deposit of solid water is a double layer of glass with a sufficient air-space between.

He states that applications of glycerine, alcohol, and other solutions are of no avail in extreme weather and that, in any case, they must be so frequently renewed that they become extremely troublesome.

In the northern portions of Russia where zero weather is sufficiently common, experience has taught the owners of show windows that the only effective protection is a three-inch air space between two panes of glass. The outer sash is rendered as nearly tight as possible by calking the chinks and pasting strips of paper over the crevices. The glass is then carefully cleaned and dried on a clear, mild day, and a second sash, fitted with the same care to prevent all circulation of air, is inserted about three inches within the first.

The double panes are said to obstruct the view very little. The physical cause of the deposit of moisture and ice upon windows is the difference in temperature between the surface of the glass and the air bearing a relatively high proportion of moisture, which comes in contact with it.

EUCHRE PARTY.

On Thursday, October 12th, the members of the Ottawa Retail Grocers' Association held a progressive euchre party in Booth's Hall on Somerset street. Mr. Fred W. Forde, in the absence of the chairman, presided and made an efficient officer. During the course of the evening's entertainment Mr. Ab. Driscoll, of H. H. Brennan's staff, was presented with a handsome traveling bag prior to his departure for the west. Mr. Driscoll has been a faithful worker in and for the association and his friends took this occasion to show their appreciation of his services.

The result of the euchre party was as follows : First prize, Geo. Atkinson, silver syrup jug ; second prize, D. K. McIntosh, silver bonbon dish ; booby prize, Chas. Provost, bag of marbles. Mr. Provost, who by the way is the popular treasurer of the association, thoroughly enjoyed his prize, and though he is rather old to play marbles for keeps, the practice will relieve him of some of his hard work.

Among the invited guests The Grocer noticed Mr. Geo. Shouldis, president Bakers' Association ; Mr. Mark Sutherland, representing Canada Sugar Refinery, and Mr. J. Fitzgerald, city traveler for the F. J. Castle Co., Limited.

Refreshments were served and done justice to by all.

Mr. Sauber, general manager of the Marine City Sugar Co., Marine City, Mich., states that if they cannot get the sugar beet on the same tariff as other vegetables coming from Canada they will be compelled to establish their factory in Canada. The sugar cannot be made without the beets but the factory cannot afford to pay the present duty. The Michigan farmers in the district will not go to the trouble of cultivating beets for the sugar industry.

NOTES WORTH NOTING.

WHAT is the matter with American cheese in foreign markets? Exports for the first eight months of 1905 were only 5,613,498 pounds, against 15,179,911 pounds in 1904.

Out of 180 samples of Canadian butter found in the retail market and intended for home consumption, which were analyzed by the chemists of the Inland Revenue Department, only one contained borax and boracic acid. The maker is unknown.

* * *

The Canadian Customs will be considerably enriched as the result of a large consignment of gin, which arrived at Montreal recently from Rotterdam on the steamship Malinhead. The consignment consisted of 68,000 packages, and the duty will amount to $250,000.

* * *

The London Morning Post uses the Nelson Centenary as an opportunity for drawing attention to the failure of the Admiralty to recognize the value of the North American fisheries as a school for seamanship. Canada has a seafaring population second only in numerical strength and seamanlike qualities to that of the Newfoundland and Nova Scotia fisheries, which are notable recruiting grounds. Good men are also to be found in the Quebec ports.

Charles M. Kitson, Canadian Commercial Agent for South Africa, writes in respect to the demand for cattle that different localities have different demands for cattle. Cape Town is a likely point for good quality milch cows of any mixed breed, the Holstein variety being a strong favorite with the Dutch community. Port Elizabeth and East London on the other hand have a leaning towards the Ayrshire and Shorthorn breeds. There is a demand at present for well-matched carriage horses of good action and appearance, not necessarily thoroughbred, and pairs with these qualifications would probably fetch from $750 to $1,000.

With regard to the advertisement published on another page for Messrs. Laporte, Martin & Co., Limited, the document guaranteeing the excellence of their famous Mitchell Scotch Whisky is interesting. This document is the Imperial Government analyst's report, at Glasgow, 1904, viz:

"Analyst's report on Mitchell's Old Scotch Whisky. The exhaustive chemical analysis to which Mitchell's 'Heather Dew' Old Scotch Whisky has been submitted in this laboratory, enables me to form a highly favorable opinion as to the care and technical skill that have been brought to bear in its distillation.

"I consider it to be a perfectly sound and well-matured product, and being free from contamination with fusel oil and other injurious matters, it is well suited for ordinary and regular use. The 'Heather Dew' is a mixture of carefully-selected products, forming a blend of choice and delicate flavor, and I can recommend it for its high quality and purity of composition.

"The Canadian shippers who are complaining of the shortage of equipment on the Canadian railroads," said a G. T.R. official recently, "may not be aware that a similar condition prevails on every road in the United States. The Wall Street Summary of last week states that all the railroads operating eastbound from Chicago and St. Louis report further traffic congestions and car blockades. The situation is daily assuming a more serious aspect, and the problem of moving freight when the cold weather sets in is causing more anxiety among transportation officials than ever before at this season.

"There is not a road which is not short anywhere from 10 to 35 per cent. of the cars and power necessary to fill the orders from shippers, and if such conditions exist now with ideal weather prevailing, it can readily be seen what hardship will come when storms and cold weather must be dealt with.

"Traffic is of a most diversified character, perhaps more so than ever before, when the vast aggregate of business moving is taken into consideration. Steel, iron, merchandise, grain, supplies of all kinds, and coal are being rushed forward in a volume that is amazing. Officials see no relief in sight and have set their office forces to work on plans which are hoped to at least modify the inevitable—the Winter car blockades."

From present indications the C.P.R. will have carried to Fort William before navigation closes, about December 5, almost twenty million bushels of wheat. The largest amount carried to that point during any former corresponding time was in 1902, when 15,550,000 bushels reached the head of the great lakes. Considering the large increase in the total crop this year, the C.P.R. should be able to greatly increase the movement, because they have almost three thousand more cars and 116 more engines than they had last Fall. A better idea of the present equipment may be formed when it is compared with the equipment of 1902, the record crop year prior to 1905. It exceeds that year by 10,341 cars and 305 engines. The equipment, therefore, has increased more rapidly than the crop.

RECKITT'S BLUE and ZEBRA PASTE {Always give your Customers Satisfaction

The Man Behind the Counter

is the one we recognize. We want the co-operation of the retail clerks throughout the country in extending and increasing the sale of the great Fairbank specialties:

Gold Dust Washing Powder
Fairy Soap, Copco Soap
Fairbank's Glycerine-Tar Soap
Fairbank's Scouring Soap
Fairbank's Sanitary Soap

We are willing and anxious to acknowledge the service they can render us by rewarding them in direct proportion to the interest they display in pushing these goods. Our method of rewarding is "The Fairbank Plan," which is a system of couponing our specialties in such a manner that the coupons can be easily removed when the goods are sold, and giving for these coupons useful articles, the best that money can buy. Our whole aim is to give the clerks the best value we can secure.

The products embraced in "The Fairbank Plan" are easily sold because they are the best value and give the greatest satisfaction to the consumer. They increase the trade of the store and "The Fairbank Plan" rewards the dealer or his clerks for selling them.

Send for a copy of "The Fairbank Plan" illustrated premium list. It will pay you.

A CIDER OPPORTUNITY.

THE consular report published at Washington in a recent issue contains some very interesting information on the subject of cider making in England. There is, undoubtedly, an excellent opening for Canadian cider, if makers are prepared to adapt it to the requirements of the English markets. The cider makers of Great Britain will have to buy a great quantity of cider apples abroad this year, and some makers, to meet the ordinary demands of their trade, will need to supplement their own cider with that of foreign make.

In a report made a few years ago, when there was a shortage in cider owing to a small crop of apples, it was stated that a cider maker, who wished to buy foreign cider, claimed that, while for many years Americans had better processes for refining cider, the English had adopted all that was good in the American processes, and had adapted some of them to the special requirements of Great Britain. The English cider consumer prefers a heavier bodied cider, and one of better keeping qualities. The Birmingham Daily Post, in an article on scientific cider making, telling of some interesting experimental work in that line initiated by the Bath and West of England Agricultural Society, declares it is "remarkable that the making of cider, a beverage which was probably never more popular than at present, had never received more attention from the laboratory."

Rule-of-thumb methods prevail in producing cider, hence it was not surprising that there should have been material differences in quality, color, flavor, etc., and that the blending of fruits has been regulated by individual discretion or taste. The experimental work of the society receives official recognition in the form of a sum of money annually allotted by the Board of Agriculture. From this sprang the National Fruit and Cider Institute, which has just completed its first year of working, and the results of whose investigations with regard to the cider making industry justifies the belief that great benefit will accrue to those who care to accept its recommendations.

Students in cider making are given instruction at the institute, where there is a well-equipped laboratory which contains an American mill and press of special design. Experiments have been made with the six different kinds of apples growing in the six cider-making counties, with the object of definitely establishing for blending purposes the relative composition of the different kinds of apples, such as the amount of juice yielded by the same weights of the different varieties and their chemical compositions, especially in sugar, acid, and tannin, and the nature and rate of fermentation. In twelve months the institute has produced and investigated more than fifty distinct kinds of cider and perry (the cider of pears).

The institute will also study the question of discoloration, believing that the blending of ciders having a tendency to discolor with those of a highly acid character will prove advantageous. The society wishes the institute to study the diseases of fruits and fruit trees and the question of grafting, etc. In grafting there are in England two opposed systems. In the Herefordshire system the stocks are budded or grafted close to the ground, so that in the adult tree the stem is a product of the growth of the bud or graft (i.e., of the desired variety). In the other system (the Somersetshire) the stock is allowed to grow until the stem is about 6 feet in height and has produced a good head. It is then budded or grafted at the head with the desired variety.

WALKER BINS

WALKER BIN FIXTURES are rapidly becoming the indispensable equipment of the modern grocery store. Perfect in every detail of their construction, they possess that symmetry of proportion which indicates taste and refinement.

Every Counter, Wall Case and Special Section facilitates, by its perfect convenience, the work of the clerk, enabling him to handle his goods quickly and effectively, while clean and attractive displays offer the customer an irresistible temptation to buy.

Neatness and cleanliness in interior displays are magnets which often attract and hold the customer quite as effectually as good goods and low prices

WALKER BIN FIXTURES are made up into Counters, Wall Cases and Special Sections designed for special purposes. They are constructed on the "elastic" unit system, in section lengths of from six to twelve feet, and shipped ready for installation. Everything fits. No nails, no carpenter, no worry.

The bin itself is so constructed that it is equally counter-balanced, the weight of the goods keeping it closed and air-tight and, when swung open, it remains in a stationary position, making the goods easy of access. The display in front is kept in place by two metal slides which hold the goods displayed in a permanent position and give the bin the appearance of being full no matter how little it may contain.

WALKER BIN FIXTURES are manufactured only by THE WALKER PIVOTED BIN AND STORE FIXTURE COMPANY, OF BERLIN, ONT., who will be pleased to estimate on your requirements.

Write for descriptive literature.

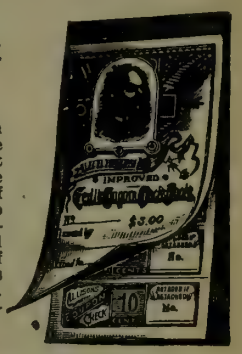
A Two Cent Mistake

Don't amount to much in any business, but the striking point is that a clerk is just as liable to make a mistake of $2.00 as he is of two cents, and a few mistakes like this would pay for enough of Allison's Coupon Books to last a year or more. With these books mistakes are impossible.



IF A MAN WANTS CREDIT

for $10, give him a $10 Allison Coupon Book, charge him with $10, and there you are. No trouble at all. If he buys a plug of tobacco for ten cents, just tear off a ten-cent coupon—that's all. And so on for all his purchases up to limit of the book. NO PASS BOOK. NO WRITING. NO TIME LOST. NO KICKING. There are other Coupon Books, of course, but why not have the best? The Only Spice of Life for Horses, Cattle and Poultry

IS Myers'

It is not a Stock Food, but a condiment to be used with food, and contains no corn, middlings, etc. Why pay ten cents per pound for what costs only one cent? If you desire bulk for your money take 100 pounds of middlings, or such like, and mix with 100 pounds Myers' Spice, you will then get a much superior article than most advertised Stock Foods, and it will cost you only $5.50 per 100 pounds. A saving of $4.50 on 100 pounds is an item not to be lost sight of. Is not this true economy?

The trade is respectfully invited to write the

ONCE MORE WE WOULD TELL YOU

Why the OLD HOMESTEAD BRAND CANNED fruits and vegetables are better than those packed by other factories.

FIRST : We are in the heart of what is without doubt the choicest fruit and vegetable district in all Canada.

SECOND : We have beyond all question the cleanest, most modern and best equipped canning factory in America.

THIRD : Our head processman is an expert in his line and bears the name in the United States of being the best in the business.

FOURTH : Our principals are practical men, who were thoroughly acquainted with the conditions of the canned goods trade in Canada before organizing the OLD HOMESTEAD CANNING COMPANY. They saw an opening for an independent factory that would put up nothing but strictly first-class goods—and that's what they are doing now.

Such in brief are the reasons why

THE OLD HOMESTEAD BRAND
CANNED FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

have all others beaten.

BUSINESS METHODS AND SUGGESTIONS

A CREDIT REVIEW.

THE extension of credit in a retail establishment is obviously wholly dissimilar from the methods employed in a wholesale house, although the definite objects are practically the same. The class of goods is different, the amount purchased varies, and the class of customers who purchase are not as a rule acquainted with business methods, whereas the customer of a wholesale house is constantly brought in touch with ideas and systems employed by such houses.

Cash vs. Credit.

A large number of retail stores are running business to-day on a strictly cash basis, and, although this is a much safer and more satisfactory way, where a store has the monopoly, and can afford to be independent, still a certain amount of trade will undoubtedly turn to the store which carries the monthly account. It should be the aim of such a store to secure as large a number of credit accounts as possible, provided only first-class accounts are opened.

When an account has been opened with a customer it is only natural to expect to hold the trade of that customer. He will more easily make purchasest at a store which carries his account, whereas if he were obliged to pay prompt cash it would be immaterial to him where his supplies were obtained, provided quality and price were satisfactory, the result being that he would go from store to store to purchase his requirements, as no one store would have any hold upon him.

The percentage of loss on account of bad debts must be kept down and collections watched even more carefully than in a wholesale business.

The Customer.

The customer looks at the price and quality of the goods purchased, he also expects courteous treatment, promptness and accuracy on the part of the clerks employed—a good account may be, and is no doubt very often lost simply through lack of interest displayed on the part of the salesmen, especially in some of our large stores.

Extending credit in a retail business is more of a personal matter than in a wholesale house; the person in charge should be in close touch with every department of a retail business.

The credit man should be tactful, diplomatic and be able to read human nature and recognize the fact that he is not dealing with business men.

A retail merchant who desires to have his bad debts reduced to a minimum should be familiar with the conditions which exist in the community in which he is extending credit, such as strikes, removal of factories employing a large number of men, etc. He should also take into consideration a customer's position, source of income, prospects, etc.

The merchant may often find it a very difficult and delicate task to obtain the necessary information about a customer which he desires, but by a personal conversation, certain facts may be drawn out skillfully and tactfully, so as not to offend a prospective customer. Perhaps the buyer is well known in the community in either a professional or a business way, but if information cannot be obtained in any other way, the commercial agencies will furnish it.

The clerk who sells a buyer about to open an account or who is unaware that such a buyer has an account already, should use a great deal of tact and common sense so as not to offend a customer with inquiries as to his account, as a good account may be turned away at once.

Collection.

A limit should be placed upon the purchases of doubtful customers, so as to have the account brought before the notice of the person in charge just as soon as that limit is reached.

It is not only necessary to use judgment in regard to opening a new account, but the account must be watched carefully afterwards.

Collecting of overdue accounts is a delicate business, as if a customer feels that the retailer is dunning him for an account, he will, although perfectly good for it in most instances, feel inclined to buy elsewhere until he has paid off the account.

Accounts should be rendered exactly in accordance with instruction, i.e., using the title Mr. or Mrs. as the case may be.

Overdue Accounts.

Overdue accounts should be collected promptly for three reasons:

First—The loss through "bad debts" will be reduced to a minimum.

Second—The customer will feel more inclined to buy if his account is paid, but the request for settlement must be made judiciously.

Third— It requires capital to carry overdue accounts, which often means a considerable loss, through bank interest.

THE UTILITY OF SYSTEM.

JUST the difference in the way the two men use their heads makes the difference in the way they conduct their business. Misdirected, systemless work will make any business management ineffective, while careful planning, simple, effective system, will aid even moderate ability to accomplish vast results.

How few business men make a study of the economy of time and energy of employes! They handle their goods over and over again. People are working at cross purposes everywhere, duplicating work, confusing orders. A little planning, a little more shrewd headwork, would save many a house from dry rot and paralysis.

These systemless men never stop long enough to think deeply into their business to plan comprehensively. They hurry to their offices, open their mail with a rush, look around the establishment a little, without ever acquiring that penetrating eye and sharp observation which characterizes the great merchant who uses his head. They do not penetrate beneath the surface of things, and get down to the core of principle.

In most of the smaller concerns which have never been able to rise above mediocrity, you will find high priced employes opening mail, sorting letters, sending out circulars, doing work which could just as well be done by low-salaried help. You will find people working at a disadvantage all around the establishment, doing the wrong thing, the uneconomical, unbusinesslike thing, just for the lack of a little thought projected into the system. Everywhere people are using their hands and their feet instead of their heads, trying to substitute muscle for brain.

All this hurry and flurry, rush and drive about nothing. It is the calm, cool, calculating head that gets things done. A level-headed, keen business man would go through such an establishment in his own line, and in a single day make comments, suggest changes, and give ideas which would revolutionize the whole business, and lift this mediocre concern into excellence.

* * *

Yet the proprietors of these small houses go through life complaining of their hard luck and the fates which kept them down. They lay their non-success to a bad location or change of business, or too many competitors, when competent men all about them know that it is the lack of the proper use of their heads.

A FRIENDLY CHAT.

ONE thing every storekeeper ought to do occasionally is to call his clerks together and say to them something like this:

"You and I want to make more money in this store. But in order to do that we must do more business. Now I want suggestions from all of you, about anything you think we can do to increase trade and gain new customers. Or, if you see any waste going on that we might save, I want you to tell me. I want each one of you to keep your eyes open, use your brains, and think of something that will improve this business for your sake and my sake. If there is any one of you who does not care to try to improve this business, we don't want him here. I would rather get rid of him and divide his salary among those who do care. Now as soon as a suggestion comes to your mind, let us have it, and we will see if we cannot all of us make more money."

A scarcity of potatoes seems likely in British Columbia, and, from reports, the price is likely to be higher this season than ever before in the history of the Province. Although the crops were large enough they have been very badly affected by rot, and a great quantity is quite worthless for food purposes.

A report from Winnipeg states that the Hon. S. Fisher has decided to have three smaller farms instead of one large farm for Alberta. One will be established in the south, one in the north, and one near the centre. The central one will be chiefly engaged in solving dairy problems, and will in all probability be situated at Innisfail.

For some time past there has been considerable spearing and other illicit fishing going on at Wilcox Lake, three miles from Aurora, which was stocked with bass by the late Government. The Minister of Public Works has therefore decided to appoint a fishery inspector of that lake, and the selection has fallen on Mr. William Hastings of Aurora to fill the post.

The war between the wholesale grocers of St. John, N.B., still continues, though there is but little excitement over it. Those who cut prices have not advanced, and those who refused to do so still remain obdurate. Peas and corn are being sold by a few firms at an actual loss of from six to eighteen cents per dozen tins. The majority of the grocers, however, are not cutting, and as a consequence are not selling very large orders in New Brunswick. The trade with Nova Scotia continues as usual. The present state of affairs is not benefiting any of the wholesalers, and it is hoped that a settlement will shortly be reached.

Henry F. W. Behnson, of Spring Ridge, has forwarded for the inspection of the Agricultural Department specimens of what he claims to be a new variety of pear. The fruit is gathered from a fourteen-year-old tree raised from seed by Mr. Behnson, and appears to be of the species known in England as the William pear, but more elongated in shape like the Jargonelle. It is of a luscious banana flavor, in consequence of which he suggests that it should be named "Banana Queen." J. R. Anderson, Deputy Minister for Agriculture, has forwarded a specimen to Professor Van Demans, who acted as judge of the fruit exhibit at New Westminster, and has asked for his opinion on it.

It is not to be denied, says the American Consul at Eibenstock, that German foreign commerce owes a great deal to the very liberal credit system which has been in use during the past twenty years. In many cases this credit system has been the ruin of English houses in the countries of South and Central America and Asia. American merchants and manufacturers also find the three to four months' credit system the most formidable weapon of their German rivals in every part of the world. In certain lines of goods credits are often granted for a longer period of time. An attractive credit is often a more powerful aid in securing trade than the finest and cheapest line of goods for which cash is demanded. Yet in the textile industry of Chemnitz, Eibenstock, and Annaberg—cities that manufacture large quantities of hosiery, gloves, and dress trimmings for the foreign market—there are indications that the long credits which are conceded to the trade of some countries, especially in the Orient, are not returning good results.

HAMILON RETAIL GROCERS.

THE Hamilton Retail Grocers' Association held its regular meeting in the Board of Trade rooms, with W. Smye, second vice-president, in the chair.

Mayor Biggar was present by invitation, and addressed the meeting on the sanitarium proposition. He laid the case before the members in a clear way, and most of those present spoke in support of it.

C. H. Peebles gave notice that at the next meeting he would vote that a grant of $200 be made to this cause.

The members also spoke in approval of the public testimonial to Bandmaster Robinson, and it was unanimously decided to devote $25 to that purpose, on motion of Adam Ballentine, seconded by John O. Carpenter.

W. Smye was then invited to leave the chair, and Mr. Kirkpatrick took it. Adam Ballentine then, on behalf of the association, presented Mr. Smye with a beautiful Morris chair in recognition of his valuable services as chairman of the picnic committee. Mr. Smye made a suitable reply.

Under the heading of regular business some time was given to a discussion of collection of accounts. The grocers propose to ask the butchers and bakers of the city to co-operate with them in getting after people who can pay, and will not. One proposition is to unite the three branches and appoint a secretary whose duty it shall be to see that the accounts are paid.

THE BEAN SITUATION.

Reports from the Kent and Elgin bean district are to the effect that while the crop is not a large one the quality of the bean is very good. In fact one dealer declares that many samples are better than hand picked of last year.

The feeling is stronger than earlier, the American market showing a firmer tendency and $1.35 per bushel is being paid the farmers.

VISITOR FROM SWITZERLAND.

MR. HENDRY O. SCHATZMANN, export manager of Tobler & Co., the Swiss chocolate manufacturers, was in Toronto this week and called on the trade in company with Mr. McLure and Mr. Langley, the company's agents for America.

Mr. Schatzmann came over on the Amerika on her maiden trip and is enthusiastic over the luxurious appointments of this floating palace. There were 3,600 passengers aboard with a crew of some 400, and although the sea was rough its turbulence was little felt on shipboard.

The milk chocolate business, says Mr. Schatzmann, has had a wonderful development in Switzerland and has forged rapidly ahead of France in the last five years.

The Tobler Company have recently acquired the plant of M. Talmoue, Torino, Italy, at a cost of a million and a half francs, and an additional sum of 200,000 francs for trade marks.

Mr. Schatzmann accompanied by Mr. McLure will visit Chicago, San Francisco, New Orleans, Washington and Philadelphia before leaving for Europe again on December 5th.

A number of years ago Mr. Schatzmann spent some eighteen months in Montreal and finds on his return to Canada gratifying evidences of growth and prosperity.

HINTS TO BUYERS.

Leonard Bros., Montreal, have arriving this week new haddies and kippered herrings in 15 lb. boxes; fine, fresh cured stock.

Mr. W. H. Dunn, eastern representative for Tillson, of Tillsonburg, reports good sales of rolled oats, notwithstanding the recent advance.

All grades of shell oysters are a feature with Leonard Bros., Montreal, from fancy Malpecques at $8, to ordinary grades of bulk at $3. Nothing more seasonable can be offered.

The Canadian Fairbanks Co., Limited, is about to place on the market a new scale, which has been specially gotten up to suit the grocery use, and has features which particularly adapt it for that trade. It will be known as the "Common Sense Grocer's Scale."

White & Co., Limited, received the first two cars lemons to reach Toronto this season. Stock is very fine for first shipments.

Florida oranges are arriving more freely and with quality much improved.

White & Co., Limited, are handling a very fine line, the "Coon Brand," which is taking well with the trade.

A. F. MacLaren Imperial Cheese Co., Limited, have just received their Fall shipment of Eagle Brand Roquefort Cheese. Like Canadian cheese, the best Roquefort is produced in September, and as this firm controls the sale of Eagle Brand Roquefort for Canada and United States, those who desire something specially fine in this line should communicate with them.

Shipments of Swiss, Gorgonzola, Roquefort, Edam, Pineapple, Camembert, English Stiltons, and various other fancy cheeses are arriving for A. F. MacLaren Imperial Cheese Co., Limited, who are the largest importers of fancy cheese in this country. Quality did it.

OLIVE CULTURE ON THE PACIFIC.

COSTLY experiments in the adaption of soil and patient labor in cultivation have placed olive growing among the first industries in Southern California.

Feeble attempts have been made to grow olives in Arizona, Florida, and some parts of Southern Texas, but practically the only olives grown in the United States are in Southern California.

The earliest American olive growers were the Franciscan missionaries, who came from Spain during the last quarter of the eighteenth century. The Spanish padres brought olive seeds from Castile, and planted the first American olive trees at San Gabriel and San Juan Capistrano, in Los Angeles county. That was about 1768. The fruit from these trees is known as the Mission olive, because the trees grew about the Franciscan missions.

* * *

Until 1881 no olives were grown in California but the Mission variety, and the growing of them was desultory and confined to Spanish families in the rural regions. Southern California began to fill up rapidly with eastern settlers at about that time, and the possibilities there were in growing olives as an industry to supply the American market was seen.

* * *

Then, just here, began a long list of experiments among enterprising growers to find what varieties of olives are best adapted to the soils and climate of Southern California. These experiments cost thousands of dollars and years of toil and watchfulness. For instance, Rev. C. F. Loop, of Pomona Valley, went to Italy, Spain and the Riviera, and spent months in studying the old olive history there in all its phases. He imported several varieties of olive trees, and gave seven years and drew heavily on his financial resources to test the several varieties fully in several soils, under various climatic conditions. Edward W. Fries spent over $20,000 and ten years in finding a variety of olive trees best adapted to oil production in Southern California. Elwood Cooper planted and re-planted a large acreage to imported olive trees in his effort to ascertain the most satisfactory variety of the seacoast lands of sunny Santa Barbara county. About eight years ago California olives began to be seen in the markets, and to-day they are shipped east in hogshead quantities. The early experimenters are at last reaping their reward in substantial profits for all their outlay and work.

The Mission olive is still the most popular variety grown in California because of its steady bearing qualities, but the Nevadillo and Rubra, which are imported from Lombardy, are fast coming into favor with the buyers in the east. As in growing oranges, lemons and prunes in this State, there are certain localities where olives thrive extraordinarily well and where the planters have greater faith in that branch of horticulture than in any other. Pomona Valley is the acknowledged home of the olive industry in Southern California, and the fact that from 300,000 to 350,000 trees for planting olive orchards have been grown there and shipped away annually makes it the most important olive nursery depot on this continent.

There are in California nine mills for the production of oil from the olive. The largest is the James mill, at San Fernando. It was built two years ago on plans from Italy, and much of the machinery and apparatus came from Leghorn, Italy, and Barcelona, Spain. The Cooper olive mill at Santa Barbara and the Kimball mill at National City, near the Mexican border line in San Diego county, have each cost many thousands of dollars, and have been sources of large profit. So large has been the call for California olive oil since 1896 that the whole product has frequently been sold in less than ninety days after its extraction from the berries. It was formerly contended for years that the olive oil, adulterated with cottonseed and peanut oils and other ingredients, was so popular and cheap in the United States that the average person did not know the difference, and, therefore, did not care for the pure oil of the olive.

In California the method of growing olive trees from small cuttings has for ten years been made a great success. Olive trees for orchard planting purposes used to cost $7 to $8 each. They can now be had by the thousand for 10 and 15 cents each. A poor Pomona nurseryman found by experimenting that olive trees could be propagated from cuttings by starting them in the Winter months in boxes of sand in hot greenhouses. That discovery has been worth millions of dollars to California and the southwest, but the discoverer is still working in a Pomona nursery for $1.50 a day.

The new method of propagating requires the most constant attention and much experience, but the plants are grown on such an enormous scale that the cost of each is very low. When the cuttings are rooted they are transferred in the warmer months of Spring to the out of doors nursery, where they become trees of three and four feet in height in twelve or eighteen months.

The practical grower plants the trees in his olive orchard forty feet apart, so that there will be ample room for the roots to spread over a large area and to get all the sustenance possible from the soil. Hidalgo Tablada, of Spain, the most famous authority on olive culture outside of California, says that fifty feet is a safe span, as the roots of each tree spread once and a half the diameter of its crown. This separation, too, insures light and heat in abundance, some growers even pruning out the centre of the tree in "goblet" shape to further bestow these auxiliaries.

The olive has an almost human gift of adaptation to environment. It flourishes in a temperature that falls to 14 degrees above zero, and in the inland valleys of California, where the thermometer reaches 120 degrees, it grows, irrigated only by natural rainfall. It finds in California foothills just such homelike surroundings as its 4,000 feet level in Algeria, and its Italian elevation of 3,200 feet. It will prosper in any friable rich soil in lime and potash, as are all the virgin lands of the coast. It also does well where its roots can penetrate easily a rocky, clay, sand, granite or volcanic formation, seeming to prefer an arid mountain soil, but not disdaining life in the black adobe near the coast.

There are in Spain, Italy and California some 290 varieties of olives, the oil of each being as distinct in flavor as the wines of different grapes, and the colors of the oils ranging from amber to deep gold. The pickling olive is no more to be confused with the oil olive than the raisin grape with the wine grape.

* * *

The picking and harvesting of olives in California is largely done by boys and girls, who drive their prepared wagons under the branches of spread canvas on the ground to catch the fruit. The tree is generally shaken, or the fruit may be dropped by hand or dislodged by padded rakes, the gatherer being duly impressed by the ancient precept, "Do not cut or strike Minerva's sacred tree.

* * *

To secure the olive oil the olives have first to be reduced to a paste-like substance, the mass being packed by hand into round, flat manila mats, imported from Italy and Spain, and known as bruscoles, so that each mat holds about half a bushel of olive pulp. The mats are piled one upon another to the height of a yard and placed in a powerful hydraulic press. The pressure upon them is gradual, continuing for several hours, until the pulp has been squeezed dry. The oil runs with the "water of vegetation" into tin tanks below.

The next process is filtering and separating the oil and water, and then comes a series of clarifications of the oil to suit the demands of commerce and to please the appetite of consumers. The process of clarifying olive oil requires about a week in a constant temperature of 55 degrees. Extreme care must be exercised in order to keep any odor or taint of atmosphere from the apartment where the clarification is in progress, for olive oil is unusually susceptible to attracting and holding odors and dust.

The edible oils and some of the others, perhaps, are filtered through prepared cotton or charcoal lying between sand and chalk, the sand holding the gross impurities and the charcoal the subtler, while the chalk absorbs part of the "water of vegetation." The final product is preserved in earthen jars or in cool reservoirs.

PRODUCE AND PROVISIONS

CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN

Montreal, Nov. 2, 1905.

CHEESE is much stronger since our last report. Country markets have advanced, and the demand for export has been generally good at higher prices. The late feature of the cheese market is the advance by the large retail shops in England from six pence to seven pence per pound. That means that the small retailers in the U.K. are now able to get eight pence per pound for their cheese, and, instead of affecting the market adversely, it has actually brought on a new demand from British markets, simply bearing out our former remarks that it matters very little to the consumer whether he pays six pence or seven pence or even eight pence per pound for cheese when he wants it.

However, the very fact that the large retailers of Great Britain have advanced their price to seven pence per pound, and instead of depressing the wholesale market by this advance actually causing a stronger market in the U.K. and in Canada, fully bears out our former remarks that prices must surely advance on account of insufficient supplies.

Some sections of Canada report a full make still going on, and promise a continuance of it on account of the prevailing high prices, but in most sections the cheese factories are about closing for the season, and what little milk there is is generally going into butter. The weather is getting cold and the pastures are no longer good for feeding purposes. Cattle have to be housed and fed, and the milk is wanted for daily use, while the small surplus will mostly be used for the making of butter. The season of production of cheese is very nearly ended, and the quality of cheese made from now on will not be good enough to suit the particular fancy trade.

As pointed out previously in these articles, stocks are not burdensome either on this or the other side of the Atlantic. They are less than a year ago, when the supplies proved to be inadequate for the natural consumption during the Winter months. Prices are higher this year, and this may decrease the consumption, but, really, a decreased consumption is needed if the present available supplies are to last until the new season opens next year.

The United States, from reliable information at hand, have this year no cheese to spare for export. Prices there are a long way above the parity of prices in Canada, and a strong demand for their home consumption.

Supplies from other countries, notable from New Zealand, do not promise to be excessive, and, taking the situation altogether, it seems at the moment at least very healthy and pointing towards higher prices in the future.

Butter is in a very peculiar position. The demand for export is falling off, as British markets will now get their principal supplies from Australia, but our exports of both creamery and dairy butter this season have been so large that our supplies on hand are barely enough to carry us through the Winter months for our own home consumption. There is practically no cheap butter here for bakers' or cooking purposes, and having no margarine here to fall back upon, we have almost a butter famine staring us in the face. Late country markets are certainly very firm, and prices show an advancing tendency, and it looks like much higher prices prevailing in our markets in the future.

To sum up, this has been a year of high prices for both cheese and butter, and the statistical situation is strong enough on both to prevent any decline and probably cause a further advance in prices on both cheese and butter during the Winter months.

LONDON PRODUCE LETTER.

By Our Own Correspondent.

THE market for Canadian butter is still somewhat dull, although there are signs of some slight recent improvement, bringing prices for choicest unsalted butter up to 110 and 112 shillings. Choicest brands of salted stand at 108 to 110 shillings per cwt. Australian butters, however, are still detracting attention from Canadian, and in view of the fact that from now onward Australian butters are expected to arrive in large quantities, importers here are wondering what stocks are held in Canada for export. Failing accurate information, it is impossible for importers on this side to move as freely as they might wish. Although, when everything is taken into consideration, it does not seem likely that Canada will be in a position to cater to the demand of this market so fully during the next few months as heretofore still there are those in London who suspect that large stocks of butter are being held in Montreal with the hope of forcing sales over here later on. Those who express this opinion, although they are in the minority, are fully determined to decline any response to further advances in the price of Canadian. Many of them have, during the past few weeks, sold their Canadian butter at a very small profit indeed, some at an actual loss, and now that supplies from Australasia are coming in more freely, they are glad to turn to something which is attracting more attention and meeting with better sales. Australian butter, owing to the fact that it is newly arrived and of very fine quality, is doing well, and the market in that direction is active. It is true that stocks on the spot are short, which accounts, perhaps, for the slight improvement in Canadian business, to which I refer above, but there is a considerable amount on the water.

Although there are those who suspect that heavy stocks of butter are being stored in Montreal, the general opinion seems to be that such stocks as there are will only be sufficient to meet the home demand during the Winter months, when production is limited. It is understood here that dairy butter is scarce in Canada, which will doubtless affect the price of creameries. Another fact, which seems to imply that Canadian exports will not be heavy during the Winter months, is that although production has not been excessive, 38,000 cwts. more of Canadian butter have been shipped since the end of June, 1905, than in same period 1904.

Cheese.

The position of the cheese market is satisfactory, with fair business done at 55 and 56 shillings. The most remarkable event of the week, however, has been an advance in price of cheese on the part of nearly all the big retail concerns. From their point of view this is highly necessary, for, when it is remembered that prices are about 10 shillings per cwt. higher than at this time last year, it will easily be understood that they have not been making much profit. Under the circumstances it is not surprising to find that they have been buying in very small quantities — just sufficient, in fact, to fill temporary requirements. Although these retailers do not, of course, say so, there can be little doubt that they have been pushing other lines of provisions, in which there is more profit to them. Stocks of cheese, held by importers, have not been large, and it is felt that the advance in price reported this week by retailers will have a very beneficial effect. It is worth noting that, according to Board of Trade returns, there were 42,000 odd cwts. less cheese sent over from Canada during September, 1905, than in the same month, 1904, and during the first two weeks of October, 1905, 17,958 cwts. less than in 1904. This decrease is not to be regretted, for it is keeping the market in a healthy tone.

Bacon.

As to the bacon market here, there is very little alteration to report. Supply and demand, as noticed last week, are fairly equalized. This is quite the wrong time of the year for any advance in the bacon market, for such a move could have but one result, viz., to advance the price of hogs. As no reliance can be placed on trade, such an advance, as far as curers are concerned, would be productive of evil consequences, since the demand at this time of the year can easily be transferred to other foods. Frozen beef and mutton, for instance, are particularly cheap at the moment, and plentiful also.

According to advices received, Canadian bacon is now very nearly touching the best qualities of Irish and Danish, realizing, as it does, 59 and 60 shillings for best weights. This is very satisfactory, and it might be mentioned just here that bales of non-boraxed, which makes such delightful eating, are particularly popular.

PROVISION AND DAIRY MARKETS.

TORONTO.

THE local demand for provisions continues to show great activity and prices, in consequence, are ruling very firm. Supplies which are coming to hand are speedily wiped up to fill existing orders; stocks are therefore making no headway, as arrivals are barely sufficient to meet the current demand.

Beef has eased off somewhat, quotations showing a reduction equal to about one cent per pound on all grades.

Street hogs have shown a downward tendency being now quoted at $7.75 to $8.25.

Butter—Arrivals are coming in in better quantities and demand is being easily met. Creamery butters all show a decline of about one cent. per pound. Dairy butters have not reached the market in any great quantities.

Cheese—The local cheese market has shown considerable strength since our last issue. The weakening tendency which was noted in our last report has suddenly taken a reverse turn and offerings on the various cheese boards have advanced several points. The export trade shows no marked improvement and the situation is practically covered by the report in our last issue.

MONTREAL.

Provisions—Market for fresh killed dressed hogs holds steady. Supplies of live hogs are plentiful and prices easy. Prices, $8.75 to $9.00 for finest.

Bacon sells freely at 10 1-2c. for long clear and 14c. to 15c. for finest smoked.

Hams are also in good demand. We quote:

Poultry—The fine mild weather prevailing during the past week very materially restricted the sales of turkeys and poultry generally. There was not so much stock shipped in from country points as is usually the case and the earlier period of Thansgiving seems to be detrimental to heavy trade in poultry. Farmers are still allowing their stock to use the fields instead of using the barnyard feeding. The latter produces the best stock and as this year not much fattening had been possible few good desirable turkeys found their way to market.

Chickens are in good supply and selling at 11c. to 11 1-2c.

Fowls, 9c. to 10c.

Geese, slow sellers at 10c. to 11c.

Ducks in good demand at 11c. to 13c.

Butter—There has been a good local demand and prices are being well maintained. The feeling that creamery butter is none too plentiful has caused more general buying by dealers anxious to get in the last of the grass butter. Outside points report good demand and steady prices. We quote:

Fancy Townships	0 22½	0 22½
Finest creamery	0 22½	0 22½
Fine	0 21	0 21½
Medium	0 20	0 21½

Cheese—A stronger feeling obtains in cheese and foreign inquiries are coming in better. Liverpool advanced the early part of last week 6d to 1s., at 55s. 6d to 57s. Local dealers are firm in their prices and not disposed to credit the reports of excessive stocks held abroad. We quote:

Finest Quebecs	0 11½	0 11½
Townships	0 11½	0 11½
Ontarios	0 11½	0 11½

Eggs—The local demand is steady. Receipts are about equal to the demand and this is holding up prices. Market is steady. Good export demand. We quote:

ST. JOHN, N.B.

Provisions—In pork, rather high prices rule. Some little domestic mess offered and there is a fair demand.

In beef there is little sale and prices are unchanged. Canadian beef does not seem to get any strong hold on this market.

Increased quantities of American pure lard continue to be imported. Canadian commands rather the higher price. Refined lard still low.

Smoked meats high.

Veal, little offered.

Lamb is scarce and high; mutton rather firmer. We quote:

VANCOUVER, B.C.

The feature of the local markets this week was of course the interest aroused in the poultry supply. A car of turkeys arrived from the east by express, but it did not count for much in face of the demand. Some small supplies of local birds were secured, but not sufficient to cut any figure. Of other varieties, ducks and chickens had about an equal interest with game birds in supplying the Thanksgiving tables. The turkeys did not cover half the market. Prices retail were quoted at 30c. per lb., but buyers could not get birds at that.

Choice dressed fowls brought 20c. per lb.

Mallard ducks were 75c. to 90c. per brace.

Local butter remains unchanged in price, 25c. and 26c., for creamery and 20c. to 22c. for dairy. East of the mountains stock a shade lower.

WINNIPEG.

Creamery Butter—As noted last week there is a brisk demand and as stocks

OTTAWA COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS' CLUB.

OTTAWA has always been a great Mecca for commercial travelers at the week-end. Many salesmen who work the Ottawa Valley, the Lake Superior district, and Eastern Ontario, make their home in the capital, and many others covering the same territory make it a point to take advantage of Ottawa's fine hotel accommodation over Sunday. Altogether, it is said that some three hundred "drummers" make their headquarters there.

For some years it has been felt that some means would have to be provided to permit the "Knights of the Grip" to get together, spend their off time pleasantly and profitably, and enjoy each other's association.

It was to fill the bill in that connection that the Ottawa Commercial Travelers' Club was conceived, and finally organized last week. Indications would point to a most successful existence for the new club, as the membership already reaches two hundred, and is rapidly growing.

The promoters of this enterprise have had in view not only their own well-being, but also the interests of the firms which they represent. One of the features of the club is a clause in the constitution which provides that the interests of the members should be guarded against legislation sought by individuals, or enacted by Governments, which might encroach upon their rights.

The long-felt-want of some common meeting place is filled by the establishment of rooms for recreation and reading. It is also proposed to hold entertainments of various kinds, from time to time. The first of the series will be held at the Russell Theatre, in January, 1906.

The club is very cosily located in rooms over the Bank of Nova Scotia, and it is proposed to make the accommodation more spacious after the first of the year, by taking in the remainder of the flat. The quarters will be fixed up attractively and the boys will have no occasion to "wander from their ain fireside."

At the head of the club are young men of push and enterprise, while the rank and file of the membership are imbued with the same spirit. This paper congratulates the Ottawa travelers on their energy, and wishes their venture every success.

The officers of the Ottawa Commercial Travelers' Club are as follows:

Honorary President — Major H. A. Bate, of H. N. Bate & Sons, wholesale grocers.

President—J. H. Meikle, representing Caverhill, Learmont & Co., wholesale hardware, Montreal.

First Vice-President—Albert Allard, of Prevost & Allard, wholesale grocers, Ottawa.

Second Vice-President — John Blyth, representing J. M. Garland, wholesale dry goods, Ottawa.

Treasurer—Sam Myers, representing the American Tobacco Co., Montreal.

Secretary—John A. Kealy representing John Labatt, brewer, London.

Committee—S. E. de la Ronde, Jr., of the F. J. Castle Co.; A. Eugene Landrian, wholesale tobaccos; Peter Gauthier, of James Robertson, wholesale boots and shoes, Montreal: Jno. F. Hawley, of the F. J. Castle Co.; W. C. McCarty, solicitor.

ABOUT FRENCH AND ITALIAN OLIVE OIL.

WE draw our readers' attention to the new advertisement in our issue of to-day, of the firm of Suaut & Cie., olive growers and manufacturers of pure olive oils, in Nice, Barri and Lucca. This very old established house is now owned by Messrs. Mengert, Gagnoli & Cie., of Nice, from which city they control their immense trade throughout the Mediterranean, as well as their olive groves in Italy.

Suaut & Cie. are of European reputation, and practically control the German oil trade, and some idea may be formed of the extent of their business when they show upon their trade circulars that they are represented by agencies in one hundred and fifty of the principal cities of Europe. Mr. J. P. Sgueglia, manager of the English department, visited several of the large cities of the United States and Canada during June and July, the result being the establishment of an agency in Montreal under the control of Mr. J. Russell-Murray, to represent the company for the entire Dominion.

The consumption of oil, especially in the Province of Quebec, is of importance, very considerable quantities being imported for culinary use, and buyers at all times realize the value of obtaining an absolutely pure olive oil, unadulterated by cotton seed, sesame, or other cheap oils, and hence the favorable reception that Suaut & Cie.'s products have received in the judgment of those able to value the intrinsic merits of the oils.

Suaut & Cie. absolutely guarantee their products, and the grading is done largely while the oil is being received from the press, the highest grade, or virgin oils, being those that are first received. All the most delicate and surface cells are ruptured, thus producing particularly fine, limpid, and pure oil.

In regard to packing and preparing for the market, the firm contains within itself all the necessary equipment for the preparation of packages and their packing. Barrels, tins, printing and all operations connected with the production of a first-class package, are all conducted within the firm's premises, so that nothing is left undone to meet the wishes of their clients.

Under such auspices it is not a surprising fact that their business interests have grown enormously during the last twelve or fifteen years, and a discriminate purchasing community, such as exists in Canada, will quickly realize the high-class value of Suaut & Cie's productions.

Wholesale buyers should take note of this oil, new to Canada, and we are sure that any inquiries made to the Canadian agent, Mr. J. Russell-Murray, will have very prompt attention.

LIFE'S COMPASS.

Windsor Salt

must not be confounded with ordinary Salt. In quality, it is as high above the common Salt of trade as can be imagined. It won't cake—it is pure, white, dry. There is no impurity in it because of the care taken in manufacturing. It is sifted, not ground. Every particle of it is a separate Salt Crystal. It pays to sell Windsor Table Salt, because it is so good, clean, pure—
it is all Salt.

THE TRADING STAMP EVIL.

THE new law relating to the giving and receiving of trading stamps has come into force with the present month, and is of vital interest to every retail merchant throughout the Dominion.

The issuing of these stamps had become a menace to the multitude of small traders in certain towns, and it is with an immense degree of satisfaction that the death of the system will be heralded.

The law is a very strong one, and brings all offenders easily under the Criminal Code, as well as greatly enlarging the classification of schemes coming under the head of "Trading Stamps," and it is incumbent upon every retailer to watch with vigilance any attempt to evade the law in his locality.

Already there are signs that the corporations which were recently prominent in this line of business are endeavoring to devise means to evade the provisions of the new law, and there is no doubt that these institutions will "die hard," but it was clearly expressed at the passing of the Act that if any part of it needed strengthening or amending it would receive consideration at the next session of Parliament.

We cannot press too strongly on all sections of retailers to awake to the opportunity and do all in their power to purify retail business methods, and look askance on any attempt to revive this old evil under any new garb.

PACKING ACCOMMODATION.

A MONTREAL jobber recently showed a representative of this paper a series of interesting correspondence with one of their customers relating to the non-arrival of a small purchase. The customer wished the goods sent to a neighboring house to be enclosed with a package from that firm for shipment. The trouble arose through the fact that the latter house would give no receipt for the parcel and the former one did not feel justified in leaving unreceipted a valuable purchase. Annoyances of this kind arising from enclosures are of almost daily occurrence and jobbers have wrestled to adjust the problem satisfactorily. The practice of sending goods to be packed to other houses is of untold benefit to retailers in effecting numerous savings. The manufacturing and jobbing trade hardly regard this practice as an evil and are constantly imposed upon by unreasonable demands. The desire to accommodate their customers has led to concessions of a ridiculous nature. The extra expense entailed is considerable. Larger cases, increased cartage, more help, time and labor are necessarily entailed. In these days of changing style and quick demand retailers often defeat their own object by insisting upon this practice, as delays and misunderstandings are altogether too frequent.

A rigid inquiry throughout the trade fails to reveal any house that refuses to give this accommodation to its customers. However, the methods employed in tracing these inclosures vary greatly and some concerted action is essential to lessen the difficulty. In general the impression prevails that since the goods are not from its own house there need be no attention paid to their proper handling. In many cases there is also no system in checking these goods.

The chief obstacle in the way of effectively performing this service is the refusal to give a receipt by more than one reliable house. This policy is extremely short-sighted, as a receipt practically relieves the firm receiving the goods from all further responsibility if the wording is clear. If trouble arises through non-arrival of the goods to the customer the firm has only to look up its receipt and trace the shipment to prove that it is not responsible.

Ignoring the inconveniences caused by this practice in the matter of delayed shipments, etc., the advisability of a receipt deserves earnest attention. The chief objection to giving a receipt lies in the fact that the firm has no knowledge of the contents or value. There are various way of getting round this difficulty, and the receipt used by Greenshields Limited, evolved by Mr. Geo. L. Cains, is explicit in every detail. This receipt is also in use by several other houses in various forms. The double form allows space to give the names of the firms from whom the goods were received and to whom addressed, as well as a rough description of the goods. Following this comes the important part, which reads as follows: "Contents and value unknown. It is distinctly understood that we are not to be held responsible for the safety of the above in any way beyond enclosure with our shipment." McIntyre, Son & Co., Limited. use the following: "As the above parcel is forwarded by us merely for the convenience of customers, it is understood we are not responsible for its contents or safe delivery." Another jobbing house which does not sign for parcels has a triple method of checking in and out and all records can be immediately found. Where care in the receiving and packing rooms is practiced, and an inventory of all packages on hand is made at short stated intervals, there is little likelihood of any confusion arising. In fact one house states that since 1903 they have never lost a parcel.

The favorite method in large houses is to give a receipt from a duplicate book when the goods are received. This is then entered and the goods are transfered to the packing room, where a receipt is given to the receiving room. The packing room enters the acknowledgement of their arrival in an enclosure book, stating who from, who for, and the date received. Further, the list of all parcels inclosed is entered upon the bottom of the invoice.

Jobbers and manufacturers seemingly regard this accommodation to their customers as an obligation for them to buy the bulk of their purchases from the house furnishing such accommodation. The fact remains, such favors cost a great deal of money and cause vexatious delays and needless unpleasantness. It is not conceded that the practice can be eradicated, but retailers are serving their own interests when they do not make an imposition of such a favor. A regular practice of this kind should be condemned by all concerned. An occasional accommodation is all right, but there is a limit to all good things.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF DISCOUNTS.

IN his eagerness to buy at the best possible rates the dealer should never lose sight of the quality of the goods or their reputation with the public when the question of discounts is considered. How often the traveling man is told: "I can't very well handle your line. You see you allow only a discount of 25 per cent., while Messrs So-and-So have offered me 40 per cent." Often the dealer says this in a decisive, matter-of-fact way as if quality or salability were no considerations whatever. Quite likely the article on which the lower discount is offered is a standard article of proved merit, well advertised and known to the public. In such a case the wise merchant will, first of all, compare the time and cost of selling, say, $200 worth of goods with an established reputation, and that are asked for by the public, with the time and cost of disposing of the same amount of another practically unknown, and that you have to persuade customers to buy against their own inclination. Not infrequently an unusually big discount is a suspicious symptom of dangerously poor quality, and be it remembered in this connection that a dealer's good name is his most valuable asset.

In handling reliable goods that are thoroughly advertised the dealer has an advantage that means much to him in dollars and cents. If the dealer has to make the reputation for the goods he handles and create a demand where none existed, and this, too, in competition with goods of established reputation and in constant demand, twice the discount offered by the manufacturer of the standard product would be too small.

When the progressive dealer rents a store he doesn't go into the side streets or away from the retail centre where he might get an elegant store at a very low figure, but he secures the best location possible, right on the principal street, and pays a good rent for it, knowing that the location will secure a volume of business that will justify the rental.

Just so in handling goods that are known to be standard, that have secured a reputation, that are advertised so extensively and judiciously that they are known almost to the exclusion of competitors' goods—the volume of sales of such merchandise will more than justify the small discount received.

The difference in discount represents but part of the cost to the manufacturer of making his wares the best known in the world, of advertising them in trade and other newspapers and creating a demand for them, of placing them in a position where they're called for and very little effort is required to sell them. He has taken the land in its virgin state, cut down the timber of prejudice, cleared the stumps of opposition and prepared it for the highest cultivation. Incidentally this costs the manufacturer lots of money, but it makes, at the lowest discount, the most profitable line of goods the retailer can handle.

There's more money in selling $100 worth of goods a month at 25 per cent. profit than there is in selling $100 worth of goods in two months at 40 per cent. profit. Furthermore, there may be reputation for you in one, and possible disaster in the other. It is the dealer's privilege to insist on the most favorable terms, but he must not allow an exaggersted discount to blind him to what is best for his good name and business.

FREIGHT AND INCIDENTAL CHARGES

FROM time to time difficulties arise between the retail storekeeper and his jobber as to the exact meaning of those mystic letters, f.o.b. The ordinary conception is that when goods are quoted f.o.b. Montreal or Toronto, the jobber or manufacturer agrees to deliver the goods to the railway people, when his responsibility ceases. But practically none of these firms have wagons under their own management which deliver freight at the receiving sheds of the railway companies. Instead, the drays of the transportation companies call at the respective warehouses to accept freight, and the responsibility of the railway company begins as soon as the goods are placed on the dray. Thus it often happens that consignees are asked to pay cartage, in addition to their freight charges, and even when not definitely stated it is generally included in the bill for freight.

Another peculiar incidental charge is sometimes made on shipments which are sold from export without having been received into stock. It is known as "back charge," or, as it is sometimes called, "advance." When traced to its head, this "advance" charge is generally found to be for some such incident as wharfage.

But, as one of our readers asks, why should the retailer be compelled to pay this "cartage" and "advance" when he buys his goods on the understanding that they will be delivered "free on board" the train or boat, at the consignor's station? He himself in selling his goods cannot exact charges for packing and delivery, and he naturally thinks that, by the time he has paid the jobber a reasonable indemnity for "packing," and the railway company for "freight," he should be exempt from such further incidentals as "cartage" and "advance."

But this is a matter which will have to be settled by an understanding between the two interests involved, and the individual retailer would have a small chance.

A CONFRERE'S TESTIMONY.

IN reply to a request for an expression of appreciation of the late William Ince, a wholesale grocer who is connected with one of the leading firms in Canada said:

"Yes, death has taken from us our aged and much respected friend, a man who justly won our very highest regard. Although we all knew of his serious illness the end came so suddenly that we were shocked by the sad announcement. He had for many years been the head of the grocery trade in Canada and was beloved and esteemed alike for his kindness of heart and the wisdom of his counsel. When disturbing troubles arose we looked up to him as our last appeal, confident that his advice would restore harmony, and often in days long gone by when mutual forbearance was much needed his personal influence kept the members of the trade together and led them on to higher ideals of business honor.

"The influence of his own sterling business life made a deep impression on all who knew him and will remain an inspiration to them in the years yet to come. It is hard to explain the secret of this power, but no doubt it was to some extent accounted for by his modest but dignified bearing and the fairness of his own business conduct. His judgment was sound, his purpose pure, his actions honorable and his friendship sincere. He was beloved for his amiable and genuine qualities. Is it, then, any wonder that under his guidance we have been able to solve many vexatious problems that have vexed the trade and created a degree of confidence and a friendly feeling which unhappily we did not possess before? To William Ince is chiefly due the reasonably good understanding which today exists in the grocery trade. His memory will long be fondly cherished by all who knew him.

"You may break, you may shatter the vase, if you will
But the scent of the roses will cling round it still."

MANITOBA SUGAR PRICES.

At moment of going to press we are advised of a drop of ten cents per 100 lbs. on sugar prices for Manitoba, on Winnipeg basis plus freight.

From Wilfrid Ledoux, Arnaud, Man., The Canadian Grocer has received the following timely, pertinent letter which speaks for itself :

Arnaud, Man., Oct. 28th, 1905.

To The Canadian Grocer,
Winnipeg.

At this time of the year when there is so much talk in the retail trade about the Western Retail Merchants' Association and its progress, I think that a letter from members of the executive showing the working of the association in their own respective districts would prove of interest to every member and also to every merchant in Western Canada.

I will try to describe the good work of the organization in this part of the country.

Before we joined the association we had in this part of the country the very same trouble that seems to exist in many other parts of Western Canada. We were selling tobacco, sugar, salt and a great many other staple goods at cost and sold them on credit for from 6 to 12 months in a year, and therefore lost money on that part of our business. Why ? Because our neighbor storekeeper across the street did it and we of course had to do the same.

We have now practically every merchant south of Winnipeg in the association with a committee and a local secretary in each town, and I am glad to be able to state that things have changed for the better since we have been brought together to discuss our own interests and now we can see our prospects for the future in a different light.

We have met our competitors and, after all, they do not seem to be as bad a lot of fellows as we pictured them to be, and by talking the matter over we were astonished to find that their troubles were identically the same as ours.

The committee of each town now meets once or twice a month as they wish to talk over business matters and arrange prices on staple goods, produce, etc., with the result that these goods are now being sold at a profit. More than that, we are now controlling the credit, which is the greatest evil of a retail business.

I am glad to report that many members have gone one better than the association and are leading the way by adopting the strictly cash system in the future. I have started since the first of October and in my case I am more than pleased with the result already obtained.

I feel sure that every member will be loyal to the rules of the association ; that they will close their books by November 1st and not re-open them again, but in case you wish to give credit next May, why not make the terms 30 or 60 days and close all accounts every 30 or 60 days with a note bearing interest at 10 per cent. until paid, and in that way protect your profits ? The implement dealer gets a note bearing interest from the time he sells his goods, the banks are drawing interest from the time they make the loan, then why not get interest on all goods sold and not paid for in cash at the time of purchase ?

The association is progressing under most favorable advantages as we are very fortunate in having The Canadian Grocer our official organ, and we are indebted to The Commercial for taking an active part in the organization work. The weekly reports of association news are of great interest to every western merchant.

A few days ago I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Coulson in Winnipeg and had a conversation with him, and I was pleased to find that he is getting along so nicely and that so much work had already been accomplished since last April. The whole of the territory covered by Mr. Coulson has been organized permanently. We must congratulate ourselves in having secured the services of so capable an organizer.

Thanking you heartily. Mr. Editor, for the space allowed me in your valuable paper, I remain, dear sir,

W. LEDOUX.

Mr. Ledoux promises The Grocer in the course of a couple of months an account of his experience with the strictly cash system which he inaugurated in his store on October 1st. This was one month earlier than the date set by the association, but Mr. Ledoux has determined to forsake entirely the credit system and all its works of iniquity. He does not propose to restore the credit system after April 1st.

* * *

Mr. Ledoux throws out the suggestion that after April 1st, when the credit system will in a measure be restored, dealers should insist on closing accounts every 30 or 60 days. It may not be possible to collect the money every month, and in that case Mr. Ledoux suggests that dealers should insist on getting a note for the amount bearing interest. Is this suggestion practicable? The Canadian Grocer would be glad to have an expression of opinion on this question by western readers.

* * *

Secretary Coulson is in Alberta this week, having been absent from Winnipeg about three or four weeks. In company with J. E. McRobie, the organizer of the Hardware Association, he visited recently the trade on the Kirkella branch line of the C.P.R. with very gratifying results. The whole of that section is now in line with the association. When last heard from by The Grocer Mr. Coulson was in Calgary.

* * *

When this appears in print the association "red letter day," November 1, will have passed into history. From all parts of Manitoba and from many sections in Alberta and Saskatchewan where the organization has spread, assurances come to The Canadian Grocer that a downright determined effort is to be made to enforce the cash system during the coming five months

MARKETS AND MARKET NOTES

Ontario Markets.

GROCERIES.

Toronto, November 3, 1905.

LOCAL trade continues to maintain a steady basis. Reports denote that many wholesalers are still doing a full complement of business, but generally speaking the demand is not as active as it was a few weeks ago.

Canned goods continue to maintain an important place with no new feature to report, although there are indications of strength in tomatoes which might possibly influence prices in the near future.

Sugar has shown a still further decline of 10c. per one hundred pounds with a decline of 15c. on Berlin sugar, which brings it to the same parity as Acadia granulated. There is still considerable weakness in the sugar market, the recent continued drops on the market having shown no disposition to strengthen the conditions.

Syrups and molasses are not showing any increased activity. There is a slight revival of interest in syrups owing to the setting in of the cold season.

Coffee is showing greatly improved market, the increase in demand being of a marked character.

Tea has not revealed any new feature. Previous prices still rule with a distinctly hardening and upward tendency.

Rice and tapioca continue with prices ruling firm at previous quotations.

Foreign dried fruits are not showing much new business, although a good deal of interest is manifest of the nature of filling previous orders with new arrivals coming to hand.

Honey is showing active demand with previous quotations remaining firm with a still upward tendency.

Whilst trade in beans has not been very active there is a considerably stronger feling than was manifest earlier in the season.

Fresh fish is showing good demand wih previous prices well maintained.

Dried and cured fish is showing greater interest with prices hardening to the extent of one to two points.

The hide market has reached an interesting stage which is generally considered to denote a stronger position. Prices have declined one to two points and arrivals are coming in in greater abundance. It is expected that the present range of values will give a much more healthy tone to the situation.

The local market for grain has only been moderately active as regards sales. Great dimculty is still experienced in transport and prices have stiffened several points since our last issue.

The flour market has developed considerable strength and good trade is reported. Quotations are showing an advance of some 15c. all round.

Breakfast cereals are maintaining good interest with demand steady. Quotations have made a decided advance and our prices are revised accordingly.

Canned Goods—Business in canned goods has shown no new feature of interest since our last report. Trade has been pretty brisk in all these lines and there are indications of an advance in canned tomatoes. It is not expected that canners will be able to deliver the full complement of orders. It will probably be in the neighborhood of 90 per cent.

Sugar—We have to report an inactive local sugar market. The leading feature of importance during the week under review being the decline of ten cents per hundred pounds on all sugars, with Berlin showing a fall of 15c., thus reducing it to the same basis as Acadia granulated. This drop has been in sympathy with the general situation which is one of weakening all over the world. At a recent date, however, the New York market has shown somewhat of a hardening, although quotations are on a lower basis than at the time of our last report. The European market is quoting raws at 8s. 1 1-2d, as against 8s. 3d at the time of our last report, thus showing 3s. 16d above New York parity.

Domestic trade continues to be only on a small basis, orders practically being merely for immediate consumption. There are no spot stocks and there appears to be no inclination on the part of the buyers to attempt to lay in any on present basis. The situation is still one of weakness and uncertainty.

Syrups and Molasses—In molasses the local trade continues to be of little interest being mainly for confectionery purposes. In syrups there has been a steadily advancing demand. In maple syrups this is especially the case and previous quotations are ruling firm. We quote:

Tea—The local tea market has not shown an excess of activity since our last report, although a fair amount of trade is manifest with prices firming towards an upward tendency for all good samples. The London market reports a strengthening aspect all round. In Indians advices denote that the crop will be under that of last season and offerings are only coming forward in moderate quantities, with the result, biddings have shown a decided improvement in tone during the past few weeks, which still continues to be the case. In Ceylons there was keen competition for all offerings, medium and better grades showing a tendency towards dearer prices. Samples show still further improvement in flavor and quality.

Foreign Dried Fruits—There is a measure of activity manifested in these lines, mainly of interest in connection with arrivals coming to hand in fulfillment of early orders. Little new trade is reported and prices generally are remaining firm.

Walnuts are showing considerable strength on quotations and present business is being done on a higher basis. Previous quotations remain unchanged.

Beans—Reports to hand denote the crop as somewhat smaller than was previously anticipated. The consequence is that the low price at which the market was said to have opened has considerably strengthened still, partly owing to the American market being reported considerably harder. We quote:

Grain—The local grain market has shown only moderate activity since our last going to press and we have to report a general advance in price of several points. Oats have made a distinct improvement in price for all grades showing good quality, but the general condition of arrivals is disappointing. Rye has made considerable advance during the week and is now quoted at 78c. to 79c..

Flour—The local market in flour has shown considerable strength since our last report and prices have advanced 15c. during the week under review. There has been considerable domestic trade movement and export trade has been very active with inquiries and some very good sales have been effected. Prices are revised accordingly. We quote:

Breakfast Cereals—There has been a good steady trade in all breakfast cereals and in sympathy with the advance on the grain market prices have advanced 30c. all round. We have therefore revised prices accordingly. We quote:

Hides, Tallow, Skins and Wool—The local market is gradually settling down to a better basis as foreshadowed in our last report. We are enabled to revise our quotations from one to two points on all hides. This revision is considered to give a better position to the local market as it is now possible to do business on a more equal footing. The American markets have shown considerable strength since our last report and quotations have advanced on the Chicago market from one to two points, a feature which is no small factor, bettering the Canadian market generally as the decline on this market supported by the advance on the U. S. markets removes the possibility of the importation of hides to this side. The feeling generally is that the domestic market will assume a much more healthy character, and with the incoming of the Fall stocks the dealers will be able to fully satisfy all demands at remunerative prices. GROCERIES.

Montreal, Nov. 2, 1905.

THE grocery jobbing trade this week reports business satisfactory. Many of the firms who have made it a special matter to cultivate the trade of the eastern coast and Lower Provinces are especially busy in getting their Fall orders out in the schooners and steamers plying the river and Gulf. The close of navigation is only a few weeks off, and merchants in the east are insisting upon the shipment of their supplies at the water route rates. Supplies for the lumber and mining camps are also being rushed out. Travelers, generally, report only fair trade. Money is not coming in as well as might be expected in face of the good harvest and the prosperous condition of the country generally.

In teas the firmness in all lines is being appreciated by dealers, and fair trade is going. The recent advance in green Ceylons is confirmed and maintained. Ceylon blacks, also, are firmer, while China greens are scarce and high. The trade in Japans is not heavy, and buyers' bids are not finding ready acceptance in Yokohama and Japan tea marts.

Sugar took another drop of 10c., the decline taking place on Monday. The beet market is weak and lower than previous record. The drop of 10c. has not, however, caused any active buying by jobbers or retailers, and with a weak market the tendency is always for holding off.

Canned goods are only moderately interesting, the principal feature being the deliveries of futures on part of the trade. As the Canadian Canners, Limited, are making 92½ per cent. deliveries satisfaction is being expressed by their customers. Corn is being delivered on a 100 per cent. basis. This, however, was looked for.

Molasses is showing up better, the colder weather contributing to this. Corn syrups in fair demand.

Coffees and spices practically unchanged since last report.

In foreign dried fruits business is getting somnolent as far as the brokerage end is concerned. New dates are expected to reach New York Saturday or Monday. An interesting feature is the ocean race between the Umbilo and the Turkestan, both of them carrying cargoes of dates, and both due about same time.

The fish trade shows a decided improvement this week, and from now on good trade is expected. Leonard Bros. report a good demand for all kinds of fresh and smoked fish. Oysters also are good sellers, and the luscious Canadian Malpeeque is a prime favorite and free seller.

Evaporated apples are high, and no heavy bids are accepted by western evaporators. The large manipulators in the Bay of Quinte district are content to sit and look for higher prices.

The same condition appears to prevail in the bean trade, and despite all reports to contrary they are hard to get. Some carloads of prime were sold at $1.55 this week, and readily at that, indicating the acceptance on part of the local dealers of the truth of the report of short crops in the west.

Rolled oats have advanced and good business is passing.

Flour is in good demand both locally and for export.

Provisions are steady and no change in conditions reported last week. Hams and bacon obtain ready sale.

Poultry is receiving more attention, and will improve with settled and colder weather.

Butter is firm with good local demand, particularly for creamery.

Cheese has recovered slightly from weak position of last week.

Eggs are showing fair trade at good prices.

Maple products and honey picking up, and better business looked forward to.

Canned Goods—The canned goods trade is on the quiet side, and no heavy orders are being booked. Jobbers are principally busy filling their future orders. The trade generally are pleased with the deliveries that are being made by the canners, the Canadian Canners, Limited, delivering 92½ per cent. tomatoes and 100 per cent. of corn. In face of the conditions in the ripening of the fruit the canners were up against, they are to be congratulated on making such a high percentage of deliveries for tomatoes. It is believed in some quarters, by parties in close touch with the situation, that tomatoes will undoubtedly be short, as the low price this year, in comparison with last year, will certainly create a stronger demand from the consumer. Canned salmon is obtaining good demand. A good deal of attention has been latterly paid to Canadian and Norwegian sardines, and some heavy sales have passed through jobbers' books. We quote:

Sugar—There was a further decline of 10c. per hundred made by refiners on Monday of this week, making the basis of granulated $4.40 and yellow $3.90. The remarkable position of the European beet and raw markets is the talk of the trade, and never in the history of the sugar trade has beets touched such a low figure. Some jobbers anticipate a still further decline, and it is hard to say just what will happen. There is no evidence, however, that the trade is prepared to buy at these prices, and sugar matters are practically drifting along. Country buyers are also holding off and buying only from hand to mouth. We quote:

Syrups and Molasses—Molasses is in slow sale, although the distributing movement is reported better in the wholesale trade, and should improve from now on with the approach of colder weather. Stocks in both the importers' and jobbers' hands are light, but in view of the continued depression in sugar, buyers seem to think that molasses will suffer in sympathy, although there is nothing in the position, as far as actual stocks are concerned, to justify buyers in their hopes. Another season there will be practically no Porto Rico molasses of high-grade available, owing to the installing of several centrals in the large sugar centres in Porto Rico, which will mean that Eastern Provinces, who are large users of Porto Rico molasses, will be forced to turn their attention to the West India molasses. The demand for corn syrups is steady, with prices unchanged. We quote:

LAST MINUTE PROVISION MARKET.

Montreal, Thursday, Nov. 2, 12.30 p.m.

BUTTER—Market steady and firm; stocks light; grass butter getting short; good to fine, 21½c. to 22c.; choicest, 22½c. to 22½c. and fancy, 22½c to 22¾c.

CHEESE—No change; cable orders few; local holders firm; Quebecs, 11½c to 11¾c.; Townships, 11¾c. to11¼c.; Ontarios, 11¼c. to 11⅜c.

EGGS—Market stronger; fresh eggs scarce; buyers in from country routes; Montreal pickled, 20c. to 21c; Western limed, 19c. to 20c.; fresh, 23c. to 24c. for selects; 20c. to 21c., straight gathered.

PROVISIONS—Steady market; live hogs weaker; selected, $6.00 to $6.25 and $5.50 to $5.75 for inferior; dressed hogs, $9.00 to $9.25; bacon and hams in good demand.

Coffee—The coffee trade is on the quiet side, with prices steady. Very little activity is anticipated, and roasters and grinders look to a steady trade. Messrs. Watt, Scott & Goodacre, in their report of the 1st inst., advise: New York option market dull at 100 points below high record for crop year, and ten points below even date last year. The planter is receiving for his coffee in Santos more than 25 per cent. less than he was receiving at the same time last year. The world's visible supply is 100,750,000 bags less than a year ago. The largest receipts in Brazil for coffee year are now coming to hand, and after the turn of the month smaller stocks will be seen in Brazil, and steadily decreasing stocks in the consuming markets. Our Brazilian friends inform us that they have for some time been able to sell to better advantage in Europe than in the United States market. Recent orders cabled to Aden have been turned down, owing to the total exhaustion of last season's mocha. New crop, however, is immediately expected. We quote:

Teas—There are no changes of a startling character to note in the tea trade. Business is reported fairly good under a firm market for all grades. During the past week Ceylon greens advanced a ½d, while blacks showed about ¼d advance. China greens are distinctly firmer, with a low crop report. Native holders it is reported, are keeping back supplies, with what object is not divulged, but readily conjectured. There has been quite a lot of inquiry for Japans, and numerous bids sent across have been turned down. The situation in Japan is, apparently, very strong, due to the extreme shortage in the crop. There has been somewhat better inquiry for China blacks. As regards Ceylon greens, though the crop is short the quality of shipments coming forward is better than ever, and well worth the advance prices that are being asked for the teas, taken on their intrinsic value as tea. Foreign Dried Fruits—The market is tending towards a quiet condition. Import orders of raisins and currants are coming in freely Hallowee dates—Early shipments account of Wm. Hills, of Hallowees and Sairs, to various distributing centres in Canada, have been well taken up. A similar demand has been experienced in the west, with the result that prices have been advanced ½c. for delivery ex the early steamers. Currants—The market in Greece has been fluctuating, but within such narrow margins as variations in exchange account for. Valencia raisins—At the very low prices recently established there will be a very large sale. Importations have not been abnormal. Sultana raisins—The advance which occured in Smyrna, already reported in this column, has been well maintained. Shelled almonds—The position in Malaga is of interest, owing to the daily advance in nuts from medium to large sizes, and a corresponding decrease for medium to smalls. Messrs. Watt, Scott & Goodacre report that Bevan's standard goods "Bulls" and "Donkeys" are now separated by 10s. per cwt., whereas in an ordinary season the difference is only 2s. We quote:

Honey—Honey sales are not numerous and dealers report business exceedingly quiet with prices easy and supplies good. Some few lots of buckwheat honey were sold at 5 3-8 and 5 1-2c., though in general 6 to 6 1-4c. seems to be the ruling price. White clover is firm and comb honey strong at 12c. to 13c., as to quantity. We quote :

White clover, extracted tins	0 07 0 07½
" kegs	0 07½ 0 08
" comb, new	0 13 0 15
Buckwheat	0 06 0 06½

Maple Products—The business turning in maple syrup is small; weather still too mild. Maple sugar on the contrary is more inquired for, and some good lots were sold to manufacturers. Some fancy maple sugar brought 9c., but this was an outside sale, the ruling prices among dealers being from 6¾ to 7½c. We quote :

Maple syrup, in wood, per lb	0 06 0 06½
" in large tins	0 06½ 0 07
Pure Townships sugar, per lb	0 07 0 07½
Pure Beauce County, per lb	0 08½ 0 09

Beans—A very strong feeling obtains in the bean market. The report that supplies would be more plentiful as soon as farmers had finished threshing does not seem to have been generally credited, as bids for carload lots by local dealers have been turned down without much ceremony. An independent and optimistic spirit seems to be possessed by holders, who all claim to look for higher prices. One large handler here bought several carloads at $1.60, and is convinced that stocks are light and the market bound to advance. We quote :

Choice prime beans	1 60 1 65
Lower grades	1 50 1 55

Fish—The demand for fish of all kinds continues brisk, as the usual Fall demand is on now. All kinds of salted and prepared fish are moving freely. In smoked fish haddies are meeting with better sale, the weather being more favorable. Kippers are also coming in more freely and obtain good sale. New smoked herring are quoted at 12c., while last season's are still being sold at 10c. Haddock and cod are more plentiful, with prices firm. Lake fish are scarce, both white fish and trout now being out of season. Pickerel or dore practically finished, and dealers will be forced to rely on frozen stock for their supplies in future. Bulk oysters are in fair demand for standards, but only a limited call for selects. The demand is, however, increasing, as is natural at this season of the year. A particularly good demand is expected this week by dealers, on account of Hallowe'en. Shell oysters continue scarce, as it is particularly difficult to obtain high grades, and prices for these are firm. For ordinary grades, of which supplies are coming in more freely, prices are reasonable. We quote:

Oysters, choice Malpeques	8 00 9 00

Evaporated Apples—Strong market. A leading broker reported sales at 8¼c., and his principals as not too ready to sell more at this figure. The grocery jobbing trade claim to be able to purchase under that figure, though a round of the street shows 8 to 8¼c. as being inside figures for good stock. The high prices asked have somewhat curtailed demand.

Flour—The flour market this week shows an improved condition, and an advance of 15c. to 20c. per barrel is noted. The smaller Ontario millers are reported as sold ahead. The demand from the Lower Provinces, as well as United Kingdom, is exceedingly good. The great trouble seems to be for millers to get sufficient cars to fill their orders. Reports among dealers say country business is satisfactory. We quote :

Winter wheat patents	4 90 5 00
Straight rollers	4 60 4 70
Extra	4 30 4 40
Straight rollers, bags, 90 per cent	2 20 2 30
Royal Household	5 00
Glenora	5 00 5 20
Manitoba spring wheat patents	5 10
" strong bakers	4 60
" bakers	5 00

Rolled Oats—Rolled oats has received more attention during the week and prices are higher. The leading millers advanced prices last Friday 30c. per barrel, and bags proportionately. Standard oatmeal also is higher. Reports from the west would indicate that a further advance is likely to occur, on account of the sympathetic advance in wheat. This advance is attributed to the unrest and revolution in Russia. The local demand is steady. We quote :

Fine oatmeal, bags	2 50 2 60
Standard oatmeal, bags	2 60 2 70
Granulated " "	2 60
Rolled oats, "	2 60
"	5 25
" 90-lb. bags	2 70
" 80-lb. bags	2 55

Feed—Mill feed of all kinds is reported scarce. A number of western millers have been taking advantage of the scarcity in the U. S., and have been shipping to that market. Prices realized there is about $18.50 per ton, in bulk, delivered, for Ontario bran. Ontario shorts are in good stock, though the demand for same is light. We quote :

Ontario bran	15 50 16 50
Mouillie	20 00 21 00
" milled	21 00 24 00
" grained	25 00 27 00

Hay—There is a good local demand for the better grades of hay, while inferior qualities are slow. The accumulated stocks that have been held here waiting export have been considerably reduced, as during the past week some 20,000 bales found accommodation on out-going steamers. A good demand for Canadian hay is reported from the U.K., particularly Manchester and Glasgow. We quote :

No. 1	8 50 9 00
" 2	7 50 8 00
Clover mixed	6 00 6 50

B. C. Markets.

Vancouver, B.C., Oct. 26, '05.

THIS week the wholesale shipping fraternity of the coast cities of B.C. have not been altogether in a Thanksgiving mood. Instead, they have been merely negatively thankful that when the C.P.R. Co. was formulating the recent changes in through freight rates from the east they did not include that part of British Columbia as far west as Mission Junction, which would mean all but the coast cities and the smaller communities dependent on these cities.

Committee meetings of shippers and of the Vancouver Board of Trade have been held, and decision to present a letter to Mr. B. F. Greer, general freight agent, setting forth the grievances of shippers, and also their desires in the way of remedy. Briefly, this letter, which has already been presented, backed up with the personal attendance

WANTED.

WANTED a specialist to push a pack of tea. Reply L. E. W., Box 18, CANADIAN GROCER, Toronto. [tf] of nearly all the leading wholesale men of Vancouver, asks for the revision of freight rates from Vancouver, with reductions such that the recent cut in rates from the east shall be equalized. In other words, that the new handicap placed on the struggling wholesale interests of the coast shall be removed. The argument is that, not having had anything to do with the Canadian Northern reaching Edmonton, which is the ostensible cause of the reduction in eastern rates, the merchants here decline to agree with the condition which makes the trade of this coast practically the scapegoat of the new situation.

Other freight grievances are embodied in the letter, which shows the ground the local men take in their view of the whole freight question as it bears on trade from the coast island. Mr. Greer, while declining to give any official statement, says that there is not the slightest danger of rates being reduced from the east to Mission Junction. In fact, he says that it is not intended to reduce the rates any further west than to Edmonton.

As the beet sugar industry is being exploited in Southern Alberta, where the Mormon colony has a large refinery, and as the irrigated districts of Alberta look to great expansion of this line of produce in the future, it is very interesting to note the experience in the irrigated districts of the Southwestern States, east of the Rockies, where, as in Colorado, very large sums have been invested in the beet-root industry. There it has just been announced by leading officials of the sugar trust that they will not spend another dollar on the industry because of the influence of raw cane sugar from the Philippines, a factor not heretofore considered. H. O. Havemeyer, president of the trust, says that raw sugar from the Philippines can be laid down in New York at 1c. per pound, which paralyzes competition. The average wage on the American sugar-beet farms is $1.50 to $2.50 per day. The Philippine sugar planters employ natives at an average cost of 80c. Mex. per week, with an allowance of rice, or the equal of 6c. American currency and a ration of rice, per day.

The British Columbia Sugar Refinery imports practically all its raw sugar from the South Seas, having recently gone extensively into sugar plantations in Fiji, and the product of the local refinery is, of course, purely a cane sugar.

Discussing the falling off in output of gold from the Klondike this year, Mr. A. B. Newell, general manager of the White Pass Railway, does not think that there is any indication that the Yukon gold fields are playing out. The reduction from a total output of nearly ten millions in 1904 to $6,500,000 in 1905, he thinks, is due to two causes, the tying up of a large number of claims in the hands of big corporations which have not been working them, and the fact that many claims cannot be economically worked until a large and comprehensive water system is installed.

When that is done the output will likely increase. Meantime Mr. Newel, who is extremely well posted, says that he is sure the annual output will continue equal to this year for a long time to come, even without any new fields being discovered, a contingency likely to occur at any time. The White Pass is likely to build a branch into the Windy Arm camp, from Caribou Crossing, if present favorable conditions continue.

Fruit supplies continue very plentiful, prices firm, quality over the average, especially in local apples. Winter pears are still freely offered, and sell at $1 and $1.25 per box. Apples, $1 to $1.75, with some poorer grades even less. Grapes, principally California, are in good supply, with prices low.

* * *

Potatoes still run high, demand strong, many buyers picking up all they can to hold for later disposal. Prices of lower mainland stock vary as to quality from $14 to $18 per ton. Ashcrofts and upper country stock from $25 per ton to $28. Other vegetables offering freely for Winter supply.

N. S. Markets.

Halifax, N.S., Oct. 31, 1905.

HEAVY shipments of Prince Edward Island produce are now being made to this port. During the week a number of vessels arrived with full cargoes. They landed here 4,100 bushels of potatoes; 4,910 bushels of oats; 200 bushels of parsnips, and 625 bushels of turnips.

Potatoes.

Potatoes are selling at 30c. per bushel. The potato crop of the Island is the best for years. They are entirely free from rot and the quality is unusually good.

Poultry.

There is practically a poultry famine in Nova Scotia this season. The market is almost bare of good stock and dealers here find the greatest difficulty in securing a sufficient quantity to supply their customers. Every year poultry is becoming scarcer in this Province. Those who partook of the toothsome turkey for their Thanksgiving dinner had to pay what is considered here to be an exorbitant price for the birds. The price was 25c. per pound, the highest ever paid hereabouts.

The poultry on the market at present is all Nova Scotia raised, no importations having as yet been made. It is doubtful if much Ontario stock will reach here this year as dealers here say that the price of birds in Upper Canada is high and that the cost to land them here would be very great. The farmers of this Province are giving up the raising of poultry as they claim that the birds injure their crops. Heavy shipments are being made from Prince Edward Island to the United States. Already thousands of live geese have been sent to these markets and high prices are paid for the stock.

Lambs.

There is a scarcity of lambs in Nova Scotia and also on Prince Edward Island. Americans are buying up all the stock available and the price has advanced to 9c. per pound, the highest for years. From Prince Edward Island alone five thousand lambs have been sent to the American markets this Fall. The first shipment of lambs from the Island to Toronto was made last week when one drover sent 620 to the Harris abattoir at Toronto. The lambs were purchased from the Tignish Farmers' Club.

Butter, Eggs and Cheese.

Prices for farm and dairy products remain firm with a scarcity in some lines.

Butter remains about the same price, though the receipts of creamery and dairy are falling. Creamery is quoted at 24c.; solids at 23c. to 24c., and dairy at 21c. to 22c.

Eggs are advancing very rapidly. They are very scarce on this market at present and good stock is hard to get. Very few Nova Scotia eggs are coming in. The country people who brought their eggs to the town market were asking 35c. and 40c. per dozen. Island eggs (in cases) not warranted are jobbing at 22c. to 24c.

Cheese continues firm at 12 1-2c. to 13c. and there is no likelihood of lower prices. The factories are getting almost 2c. more for their cheese than they did last year. Stocks in the Maritime Provinces are small.

Arrivals of Fish.

The receipts of fish during the week were quite heavy. On Friday vessels landed 3,000 quintals of dry fish and 275 barrels of pickled fish. Advices from Newfoundland are to the effect that the prices are easier and with a tendency to drop. The price here is unchanged.

Fruit.

During the past week sixty carloads of apples arrived at the terminal for shipment to the English market. The price shows no sign of receding here. Choice No. 1's are quoted at $4.00.

Sugar.

The Acadia Sugar Refinery has made another reduction in the price of all grades of refined sugar. The reduction was to the extent of 10c. per hundred pounds.

N. B. Markets.

St. John, N.B., Oct. 31, 1905.

DEALERS are very busy. Perhaps the matter of chief interest this week is the advance in Manitoba flour, which, while not a large advance, marks a much firmer market than was expected. The general situation seems improved.

Sugar—Continues to be a weak spot. Besides the low prices which rule, the Guild are fighting the imported bag sugar which is being sold at somewhat open prices.

Spices—Have very general attention a this season and prices generally are low

Ginger and allspice in particular are easy. Nutmegs continue very low. Cream of tartar is also quite low. The fact that soda has ruled about 50c. a keg higher for about a year does not seem to have any effect on the demand.

Oil—While there continues to be a very firm feeling in burning oil the local prices show no change and are still very low. Sales at this season are large. In lubricating oil business is rather quiet at this season. There is also little doing in paint oils. While linseed is low market seems quite firm. Turpentine is very high. Cod oil has been a surprise; it is very scarce and continues to advance.

Salt—A fair stock of Liverpool coarse salt is held here. The season of best demand is over. It is not expected that the early winter imports will be large. The season has been a successful one, the quantity imported has been large and prices well maintained. In fine salt there is but light business at this season. Sale is for Canadian.

Canned Goods—There is still unsettled condition in vegetables. While on some brands dealers are able to sell at list prices and so make a living profit, on others, prices at, or even below, cost are quoted. It is a peculiar situation; the whole trade is made to suffer, and the reason is said to be that one or two houses may be punished for breaking their agreements. The question is, is the object obtained? Fruits are quiet. Blueberries are dull. In spite of salmon being lower than last year, sales are rather light. Beef is easy. Domestic fish unchanged. Kippered herring not a large pack.

Green Fruit—Nova Scotia apples are very unsatisfactory this season. The packing has always been bad, but it seems even worse this season than usual. It is almost impossible to get a rightly packed barrel of No. 1's. It means that a large quantity of apples are being brought from Ontario. Better and more New Brunswick apples than usual are on the market this year. In oranges there is little good stock offered. Lemons are still high. In Ontario grapes some nice stock offered. Malaga grapes quite high and only fair quality. Cape Cod cranberries are quite reasonable.

Dried Fruits—In California seeded raisins there was quite a commotion last week. It was said prices were off a cent, but this did not pan out. A cut was made provisionally to see what quantity could be sold, the cut price to effect all previous sales. Evidently the new sales were not large enough to make it an object to lose a cent on the previous business. Quite a quantity of New York seeded stock, both old and new goods, have been sold for here. The old goods are now being offered. New Malaga seeded could only be bought in very limited quantities. In loose, Malagas supply the trade. Valencias freely offered and are low. Currants hold at full figures. Peels rather higher than last year. Figs lower. Prunes, apricots and peaches have advanced freely. Prunes are much higher than last year. Evaporated apples firm. Onions are rather higher.

Sugar—Prices are rather lower and the market is easy. On bag sugar there is quite a sharp competition, prices being somewhat open. There is a fair demand.

Molasses—Sales are rather light. Prices unchanged. Porto Rico is a full stock. Barbadoes a rather limited supply.

Fish—In fresh fish, just a steady business, little beside cod and haddock being offered. Dry cod is still high and a fair supply. Pickled herring, particularly best stocks, in supply and high prices rule. Smoked herring is firmer, although still low. Price has been advanced. There is increased sale for prepared smoked herring called "Kipperettes." Finnan haddies sell freely at firm prices.

Flour and Grain—Manitoba flour has been advanced and market is very firm. So far Ontarios are unchanged, but the situation is strong. Oats are higher. Oatmeal is higher and firmly held. The sale is not large though this is the busy season. Cornmeal is easier. Beans unsettled, but continue to tend higher. Yellow eyes are quite low this year. Barley is unchanged. Split peas are high and the sale light. In blue peas the demand now for a year or two has been very small.

THE CLOVE SITUATION.

A report to hand on the condition of the clove market is interesting and points out that it is quite possible that the price will rise 33 1-3 per cent. by the end of the year.

The Pemba crop is considered a complete failure. The total crop is estimated to be about 50,000 bales and there are reputed only 2,000 bales in Zanzibar at the present moment, whilst the total visible supplies are 40,000 bales. Holders in Zanzibar are only selling at fancy prices. The receipts in Zanzibar for the first half of October were 18,000 bales, against 15,100 bales last year. The total receipts from 1-8 to 16-10 amount to 10,700 bales, against 39,200 bales last year.

A GAMBLE IN EGGS.

Some little time ago a number of well-known gentlemen, one or two of whom were members of the town council, were haled before the magistrate of a country town in these circumstances: The defendants were interested in a bazaar promoted on behalf of the local hospital, and one of the attractions had been a "spinning Jenny, or tee-totum," which the prosecution alleged was "a game of chance."

A local grocer in giving his evidence for the prosecution was exceedingly severe on the unfortunate defendants.

"Now, look here, Mr. X——," at last broke in one of the defendants, "how would you define the term 'gambling?' "

The grocer declared that "anything was gambling when you didn't know wot you wor goin' to get for your money."

"Indeed!" retorted the defendant. Turning to the magistrate's clerk: "Will you make a note of that, sir? Mr. X—— himself is liable to be proceeded against."

"Ow's that?" shouted Mr. X——.

"I bought some eggs from you the other day," was the reply, "and I never should have done so if I had known what I was getting for my money. It was a gambling transaction — and I lost."

Exit Mr. X——.

A DRUMMER'S WITTICISMS.

"I'll have you know, stranger, that I belong to Chicago," said the Yankee. "'Deed, an' wha'd hae thocht it?" quoth the sceptic Scot; "frae the way ye've been speaking I thocht Chicago belonged tae you."

Paddy Doolan went into shop one day to buy eggs. "What are eggs to-day?" "Eggs are eggs to-day, Paddy," replied the shopman, looking quite triumphantly at two or three young lady customers who happened to be in the shop. "Faith, I'm glad to hear you say so," replied Paddy, "for the last ones I got here were chickens."

He was a recent recruit from Ireland's green turf and had secured his first position in a grocery store. One day a customer approached the new clerk and inquired for some crumbled store-cheese for a Welsh rabbit. After supplying the customer with the desired cheese, Pat inquired, "And, sure, is that phawt yer feed them on?"

"Father," said a boy of twelve, "can you tell me who Shylock was?"

"What!" exclaimed the father in an aggrieved tone, "have I sent you to Sunday school for the past six or seven years only to have you ask me who Shylock was? Shame on you, boy! Get your Bible and find out at once!"

Hans, the ruralist, was in search of a horse. "I've got the very thing you want," said a stableman, "a thoroughgoing road horse. Five years old, sound as a quail, $175 cash down, and he goes ten miles without stopping." Hans threw his hands skyward. "Not for me," he said, "not for me. I vouldn't gif you 5 cents for him. I live eight miles out in de country and I'd haf to walk back two miles."

The traveler tells us, and he ought to know, that the average school teacher experiences a great deal of difficulty when she attempts to enforce the clear pronunciation of the terminal "g" of each present participle.

"Robert," said the teacher of one of the lower classes during the progress of a reading exercise, "please read the first sentence."

A diminutive lad arose to his feet, and amid a series of labored gasps breathed forth the following:

"See the horse runnin'."

"Don't forget the 'g,' Robert," admonished the teacher.

"Gee! See the horse runnin'."

GOOD ADVERTISING

FRUIT ADVERTISING.

FALL fruits and accessories bring more grocers into line for advertising than branded goods, which demonstrates that the average grocer prefers to advertise "seasonable" products rather than staples. Occasionally at this time of the year one comes across the "Pure Groceries" and "Family Store" advertisements, while, of course, "bargain" announcements are always to be found—but fruit publicity is paramount just now.

One of the best fruit advertisements that I came across was John. H. Laird's, Galt. Apart from some faulty display lines the advertisement is set with taste and uniformity. "Crawford Peaches" is the subject, and the details are brief and clear. White space is used without stint, thus giving the whole a uniform "open" effect.

* * *

Dean & Walker, also of Galt, make fruit a special, headed with "Late Crawford Peaches," and summarizing pears, grapes, etc. This advertisement is even more liberal than Laird's in the matter of white space, but it is not so effective. It is what might be called a "silent" advertisement. It has little individuality. The enumeration is there. The people are to do the rest. No reason is given why Dean & Walker's goods should be purchased in preference to others.

* * *

Decidedly grotesque is what the majority of reviewers would style the advertising of Fairweather Bros., Moncton, N.B. Half a dozen words are spread over a three and one-half inch single column space. While, no doubt, such shapeless matter would catch the eye of the reader because of its oddity, what profit is there in advertising pickling spices in such a flagrant manner? They are certainly not important enough to warrant a "special," much less a "waste," advertisement.

* * *

Wm. Parker, who succeeded David Dodge, of Woodstock, has ideas of publicity which, while a little crude, should develop into something especially good later on. He gives promise of writing "reason-why" advertising — the kind that will give his store a distinctive stamp. His methods at present appear to be half of the old plan and half of the new.

* * *

Arnprior has two novel advertisers—Sullivan of Madawaska street, and Jno. Daze, "The-Family-Grocery-Store" man. Mr. Sullivan goes into print on a large scale, but not in the most systematic way. His advertisement has an inartistic appearance and was evidently drawn up in haste. The composition is very poor, the display letters being worn and the body type replete with battered faces. One or two "pull-outs" does not tend to improve the advertisement any. Using a stock cut of the ludicrous variety robs the announcement of its sincerity. This is rather to be regretted because Mr. Sullivan gives one the impression of being a shrewd grocer and the programme in his mind was ostensibly to "hit out" on the price question.

* * *

Jno. Daze's advertising is the antithesis of Sullivan's in most respects, but his advertisement, too, is badly displayed—more a matter of antiquity than coarseness, however. The heading is cramped, and, being separated from the details by a rule effect, tends to confuse the reader as to connection. Instead of employing the mitre rule in such a case the "ad-man" should have employed the turned rule for the three sides and omitted the head piece, thus preserving the coherency of the matter as well as the chasteness of the design. Mr. Daze's array of goods is creditable, other than the fact that he attempts to advertise too many things, and so misses the opportunity of impressing any one thing on the reader's mind.

McKenna, in the Charlottetown Guardian, puts more life into a three-inch single column space than any other grocer I now have in mind. He chooses a suitable heading to commence with and then proceeds in a logical way to elicit orders for his vinegar, etc. There is argument, there is suavity, but, best of all, there is a personality. The compositor, too, has done his work with precision. Not one idea of McKenna's is sacrificed. This advertisement has the flavor of one of the mail-order "big 'uns."

* * *

In the Stratford Beacon, Walsh Bros.' announcement headed "starch" strikes one as being unusual, for starch is not the biggest commodity with grocers. There are some other "priced" items, but I have an idea that the writer of the advertisement was in a hurry, hence his brevity. Walsh Bros. did not "get" all their space.

* * *

R. C. George, Port Arthur, gives "Coffee" the prominence, and calls attention to five lines and gives the prices. A re-arrangement of the details of this advertisement, with the assistance of a smaller body type, would have made room for some lines of teas, etc. Cost must always be weighed when specializing.

* * *

Huffman's advertisement in the Brantford Expositor is fair salesmanship on paper, but second rate typography. Bargains is the basis of the announcement, and in this respect the advertisement is successful. But there are too many separate lines detracting attention from one another. This is a fault quite noticeable in retail advertising.

* * *

Grocers should insist on getting better ad-setting. It helps or hinders the announcement in proportion to its superiority or inferiority. Some advertisements pass unnoticed because features are set in brevier and minor details spread out in Roycroft.

* * *

Advertisers should get the full value out of the space they pay for. White space effects when properly designed are not wasteful, but white space produced through indiscriminate display and unnecessary paragraphing is wasteful. I think the average retail advertisement could contain more matter. There is no point in taking space merely to be in print. The retail business doesn't call for that.

DEATH OF PIONEER MERCHANT.

IT is with deep regret that The Canadian Grocer records this week the sudden death of Mr. B. Meek, the pioneer grocer and general merchant of Virden, Man. Mr. Meek has conducted a general store business in Virden for almost three decades, and, in fact, his was one of the first stores in Manitoba west of Brandon. In the vicinity of Virden, where he was so well known, he had an enviable reputation for sterling integrity and honor. He was respected not only by his customers, but also by his business rivals. A representative of this paper recently attended a meeting of the Western Retail Merchants' Association in Virden, and he could not help remarking the deference paid to Mr. Meek by his business rivals, and the general respect in which he was held. His death occurred suddenly in Virden, on Friday, Oct. 27th, the cause being heart failure.

Mr. A. Sweet, Winchester, Ont., was a visitor to the Montreal trade this week. Mr. Sweet keeps thoroughly up-to-date in buying and his prosperous business shows hard work and judgment in keeping thoroughly in touch with the trade. Mr. Sweet is a good friend of The Grocer as well as a subscriber to Hardware and Metal and the Dry Goods Review.

OLIVE CULTURE IN SPAIN.

DURING recent years efforts have been made to improve the quality of the olive oil produced in Spain so as to enable it to compete in foreign markets with the French and Italian oils which are so universally appreciated. Some measure of success has already attended these efforts, and this has encouraged the leading Spanish oil crushers to spend money on improvements in their machinery, with every prospect of a good return.

A few particulars about the production of oil in Spain, and especially the preserving of the olives, may prove of interest to our readers, as it has been found that Spanish olives keep longer and better preserved than those from other places.

The pickling of green olives is an important branch of industry. Besides the large home consumption, some 6,000 to 7,500 tons, valued at about $800,000, are annually exported. The olives are packed either in bottles or kegs. For pickling, the green olives are carefully selected; all those that are in the slightest degree bruised or damaged are rejected, as only the perfect fruit is capable of being preserved.

The selected olives are then placed in fresh water to soak for several days, care being taken to frequently change the water; they are then put into the pickling mixture, which is a solution of common salt and soda, the olives being entirely covered. This is the general method adopted, and though some manufacturers may slightly alter the solution used, and add to it certain aromatic substances to flavor the olives, the basis of the preparation is invariably common salt and soda.

Ripe and half-ripe olives are preserved only in small quantities, as there is little demand for them.

As already mentioned, until quite recently little special attention has been paid to the method of extracting oil in Spain, and consequently in many parts the most primitive means are still in use.

It is usual for the small grower himself to extract the oil from the olives grown on his land; and, as he frequently does not even own the necessary appliances, he has to borrow them from the nearest town, paying for their use either in money or oil.

These machines are of the most primitive description. The olives are first crushed in a mill turned by a horse or bullock; they are then placed in lever presses and the oil thus extracted, boiling water being generally used in the process. These wooden presses, though powerful, are very slow, and it often happens that the olives have to be stored until the presses are available, with the result that fermentation sets in, and this naturally detracts from the quality of the oil. It is said that there are between 3,000 and 4,000 of these presses in Spain. Formerly the pulp remaining in the presses was used as fodder or fuel, but now it is sold and a second extraction of oil is made from it.

The largest oil manufacturers, especially those in the Province of Catalonia, have been the first to recognize the importance of improving their machinery; the old crushing mills and wooden presses have been replaced by steel cylinders and hydraulic presses, so that not only is a greater yield obtained, but the quality of the oil is better. Nearly all the machinery in use is of Spanish make.

After being extracted, the oil is run into earthenware jars or tin tanks, and, after a certain time, strained so as to separate it from the amurca. It is then poured into deposits to be kept until required, alcohol being sometimes used to keep off the action of the air. The lower grades of oil, as well as the amurca, are used in the manufacture of common soap.

NEW STORE AT STRATHCLAIR.

About a month ago George Manson opened his new general store in the town of Strathclair, Man., with a fresh stock of groceries and dry goods. He has a very attractive store with a floor space of 35 by 65 with two large glass fronts. The interior is finished in cherry with hardwood floor, oak counters and metallic ceiling painted white. He has put in a system of high pressure gasoline lamps and in fact every modern facility for doing business is found in this store. Mr. Manson's efforts met with such great success that he is now branching out into the hardware business, having secured the store next door, and is having it completely remodelled. It will be open about the first of November with an entirely fresh stock and will be in charge of D. Manson, who has had considerable experience in that line.

Manitoba Markets

(Market quotations corrected by telegraph up to 12 a.m. Thursday, Nov. 2nd, 1905.)

A FURTHER marked improvement in country collections and considerable inquiry for Christmas goods are the features of the Winnipeg wholesale grocery market this week. The crop is being handled satisfactorily by the railroads and in spite of some elevator blockades on the lower lake ports, a large amount of money has already been put in circulation as the result of the early crop movements. All branches of trade are already feeling the stimulus of this increased circulation. As there is a fixed determination on the part of both wholesale and retail trade that this money shall be used in paying off long standing obligations it is certain that the effect of the "bumper" crop will be to secure the stability and prosperity of Western Canadian business institutions.

Sugar has declined to a basis of $5.15 for Montreal granulated in barrels f.o.b. Winnipeg. Beet sugar from the Ontario Sugar Refining Co. is now held in stock locally.

Seeded raisins have declined and new prices are quoted below.

New table figs are on the market now.

New evaporated apples to arrive are quoted at 9 3-4c.. A very high price.

Canned Goods—There are no new features of interest. As noted before, some fruits, notably strawberries, are very scarce. We quote:

A "CHOP" THAT PLEASED A JAPANESE PRINCE.

There is a tea on the Canadian market known as the "Nishimura Chop." It is controlled by the Japan Central Tea Association, whose Canadian office is in Montreal, and it is No. 1 extra choicest sun-dried. An interesting feature of this particular tea is that it has come in for royal favor, the Crown Prince of Japan, to whom a caddy of it was recently sent, having expressed himself highly gratified with it. The tea has certainly a delicious flavor, as ordinary individuals as well as crowned heads have discovered. It is indeed a tea that cheers without inebriating.

A MONTREAL MEETING.

The Grocer met a number of Torontonians at the Windsor last week, among them Mr. L. S. Levee, a member of the Board of Education, and manager of that well-advertised and lauded specialty, "Psychine"; Mr. Edward H. Woolley, of famous St. Jacob's Oil fame, and Mr. T. E. Milburn, whose "B.B.B." needs no comment. These gentlemen with Messrs. John McKee and W. Edmandson, of Edmandson & Bates, were in the city attending a meeting of Proprietary Articles Association. All of them were pleased to see The Grocer.

EVAPORATED APPLES.

Domestic evaporated apples are reported to be considerably short in supply and much higher prices are looked for. Already shippers' prices have reached eight cents f.o.b. shipping points.

FRESH AND CURED FISH

POINTS ON FISH CULTURE.

At the present time when so much attention is being directed in Canada to the question of such high importance as the preservation of fish in the various waters of Canada, it becomes particularly interesting to note the experience which our American cousins have been having of late years on the same subject. Deputy Fish Warder Webster, of the State of Oregon, has thrown his whole energy into the subject during the several years he has been in office, and he has accumulated by careful observation and study much useful and important information on the question of hatching various kinds of fish.

We give our readers herewith the substance of his reamrks on the subject. He dwells particularly on the question of salmon hatcheries but there is a principle pervading his views which is worthy of note in connection with all fish hatcheries. He says:

"I shall confine my remarks to the Chinook salmon, as more attention has been given this variety so far as propagation is concerned, than to any other salmon in the river. It is evident that the results for the past two seasons from artificial propagation are most unsatisfactory, when we consider that for a number of years there has been a steady increase of the number of fry planted from the various hatcheries. In 1895 the number of Chinook salmon fry planted was less than 8,000,000. In 1902 it was 55,000,000. This increase was not spasmodic but gradual. From the enormous numbers of fry planted since 1899 there should have been a large increase in the run of fish and the pack both last year and this, but there was a decrease. In fact there has been a much greater decrease in the run than in the pack, as everyone knows how few fish escaped the gear last season, and there is evidence that it is the same this season.

"Now what conclusions are to be drawn from the foregoing statement of facts? I regret to say that I firmly believe the present method of conducting the artificial propagation of salmon is not a success. I might offer other more convincing evidence to substantiate my belief. My objection to the present method is that the fry are liberated from the hatcheries at too tender an age and consequently are devoured by their enemies. I have known trout and whitefish caught in the vicinity of a hatchery when salmon fry were being turned out to have 25 and 30 fry in their stomachs in various stages of digestion.

"In 1896, 5,000 Chinook salmon fry were marked at the United States hatchery and liberated in the Clackamas river. The spawn from which these fish were hatched was taken in October, 1895. These marked fish returned to the Columbia and numbers were caught during the years 1898, 1899 and 1900. Considerable difficulty was experienced in getting fishermen and packers to note and report these fish when caught, but there were actually 497, or about 10 per cent. of these marked fish reported to the fish commissioner caught during these three years. The fish reported ranged in weight from 10 to 57 pounds.

"Now, if there is any knowledge to be gained from this experiment you will readily see that we are getting returns this year from spawn taken at the hatcheries during the years 1900, 1901 and 1902. By referring to the reports for those years we find that the average yearly output of fry from the hatcheries was more than 41,000,000, and from the period from which returns should have been received last year the average yearly output was more than 31,000,000 fry.

"Now if we were getting returns from the hatchery plant of fry in the same ratio that the marked salmon returned it would have been possible to have taken more than 3,000,000 salmon last year, and more than 4,000,000 this year for commercial purposes, but there was not actually to exceed 1,200,000 Chinook fish take nlast year from the river and this year the number will probably not exceed 1,000,000.

* * *

"In all the hatcheries the practice has been to liberate the young fry before or at the time the egg is absorbed, or in other words, before or at the beginning of the seeding stage—four to six weeks of age. The fry at this time are about one and one-quarter inches long and with only a limited power of locomotion, and obviously incapable of escaping from their numerous enemies. Now, on the other hand, all the fish used in the marking experiments were fed four or five months before being turned out and were then two and one-half or three inches long. The foregoing general statements, substantiated by many observations, have caused me for some time past to believe that the results from artificial propagation will never be satisfactory until there has been adopted a system of feeding and rearing the fry until at least four months of age before turning them into the rivers to care for themselves."

GREEN FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

TOMATO PRICES.

MR. T. E. OWENS, manager of the Bloomfield Packing Co., was a caller at the Toronto office of The Canadian Grocer this week. Mr. Owens reports that their season has been a very good one, especially with regard to tomatoes. The close of last season left the market with scarcely any stock on hand so that the whole of this season's pack has been already placed. In their district they have been visited by buyers from the United States who have bought up any tomatoes that could be secured, owing to the scarcity of tomatoes over the border. During the conversation Mr. Owens stated that a price of 25 cents per bushel for tomatoes was a fair one both for farmers and packers. He did not think that anything would be gained by the enforcement of the five cent advance proposed by the farmers, as the effect of it would be to immediately place the canned tomato so that it could not be sold to the customer for less than twelve to fourteen cents. This would mean materially reducing the sales, whereas at the present price of 25 cents the canner was enabled to place it on the market so that the grocer could sell it as a ten cent line. Experience had shown that as a ten cent line it would sell fifty per cent. better than if the grocer had to charge twelve or fourteen cents. It can easily be seen, therefore, that it is in the interest of the farmers, packers, and the general public to keep the price steady at 25 cents.

B.C. POTATO PRICES ADVANCE.

The price of potatoes is advancing already in the market, and from all accounts the nourishing tuber will be higher this Winter than ever before in the history of British Columbia.

Reports from farmers from Lulu Island and the Delta country are to the effect that the potato crops in the different coast districts have been rather more than partial failures. The crops themselves were large enough, but on the river farms of Lulu Island, and even well back from the streams, more than half of the total crop is affected with the rot and is absolutely worthless for food purposes. Just now Lulu Island potatoes are scarce at $15 a ton, and many of the crops are being purchased direct by the larger handloggers for their camps up the coast.

Ashcroft potatoes are good, but the crops have not been so heavy as in former years. They sell at from $22.50 to $26 per ton, according to the quality, and are coming into the city in fair quantities. The strange thing about the matter is that at the Dominion Exhibition a coast farmer won the first prize for the best exhibit in potatoes, and had a large display of all kinds. All the other exhibits from the coast districts showed splendidly as well.

The potato buyers have been out in the farming country for some time, and shipments have been coming into Vancouver regularly for weeks.

ALMERIA GRAPE SEASON SHORT.

Mr. H. Fischer, son and representative of Mr. H. F. Fischer, of Almeria, received a letter per steamship Deutschland, which contains some very important information relative to the present grape crop.

The letter states positively that the crop is even shorter than had been predicted and not only will there be far less barrels shipped than was the case last year, but the season is likely to come to an abrupt termination very much earlier than was the case in 1904.

All authorities seem to agree upon the point of the shortage in crop, but the new fact that the season will be a short one also is important to Almeria grape handlers.

A SERIOUS QUESTION.

The Sarnia Vegetable Growers' Association thinks the Provincial association should ask the Tariff Commission to recommend a tariff equal to that of the United States against Canada. Competing daily with American goods on account of their location on the border, Sarnia men are more handicapped than those of inland towns. Port Huron commission merchants do a thriving trade with Sarnia grocers, often selling cheaper. There should be a duty upon American vegetables coming into Canada equal to the American duty.

The following duties are suggested: Asparagus, 30c per dozen bunches; green beans, 2c per lb.; ripe beans, 45c per bushel; corn in ear, 2c per dozen; cabbage, 3c per head; cauliflower, 4c per head; celery, 10c per dozen; cucumbers, 25c per dozen; melons, 50c per dozen; green onions, 10c per dozen bunches; ripe onions, 40c per bushel; potatoes, 30c per bushel; tomatoes, 40c per bushel; all other fresh vegetables not on this list, 25 per cent. ad valorem; all canned goods, 40 per cent. ad valorem. A specific duty on the principal vegetables is preferred, as it is said that with an ad valorem duty produce is often invoiced below its value.

NOTES.

The steamship Bavarian landed 28,000 barrels of apples, the largest number ever shipped at one time from Montreal.

* * *

The differences between the tomato-growers of Ontario and the canning companies in regard to the prices paid by the latter for those vegetables will be threshed out at the time of the Horticultural Exhibition, which will be held this month. The vegetable-growers have invited representatives of both parties to attend and present their views. The growers are preparing a statement showing the expense of growing tomatoes, and the reasons why they should receive higher prices.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

Green Fruits.

LOCAL markets for domestic fruits have now practically closed, and interest seems to be turning on Jamaica and Florida oranges, which are arriving in excellent condition.

Some carloads of lemons have arrived on market, the first of this season's stock, and are showing slightly easier quotations.

Oranges are fetching higher prices, owing probably to the considerably improved condition of new arrivals.

Bananas are remaining firm, and it is expected that this fruit will attract more attention now that the domestic fruits are leaving the market.

Apples are showing a very firm market, and all good fruit is fetching high prices.

Vegetables.

The local market for vegetables has not been marked by any great activity. Demand continues steady with no particular feature of interest.

Tomatoes are practically finished for the season.

QUEBEC MARKETS.

Green Fruits.

Business among the fruit men is reported on the quiet side, as it is somewhat between seasons.

A fair demand, however, exists for Winter apples, notably Spys, Baldwins and Greenings.

Bananas are holding up high and firm, with every indication of another advance.

Grapes are about finished, as the trade is not taking much interest in these.

New Messina lemons are expected this week, and prices will range in the neighborhood of about $4 to $4.50 per box.

Almeria grapes are plentiful, with a good demand from the trade, many of

A somewhat easier feeling generally seems to be prevalent in vegetables. While a fair amount of business is going there is no very great interest shown by buyers for quantity lots. Potatoes are selling at 53c. and 54c. per bag of 90 lbs. on track. About thirty carloads of potatoes were received, and these in a jobbing way brought from 60c. to 65c. for bags of 90 lbs. The demand for onions continues good. Inquiries from the Lower Provinces arriving freely. Yellow onions are selling from $1.10 to $1.15 per bag of 90 lbs. Quaker Canned Goods

We finished packing Corn on the 6th this month and Tomatoes on the 13th. Taking the season altogether it has been the most favorable for quality we have ever experienced, the weather being about perfect all through the season for maturing vegetables in splendid condition. This applies to all lines, commencing with Peas and running right along into Beans, Corn and Tomatoes. With the fine quality of canned goods this season and the moderate prices there should be an enormous increase in the sales over previous years. While the pack has been large it does not exceed in our estimation the pack of two years ago in any line. Of course, we cannot speak for the whole country, but we know this applies to our pack. Judging from this we believe every case of Corn, Tomatoes, Peas and Beans packed will go into consumption before new goods come on the market next year. The fine quality of the goods alone this year over previous years should make an enormous increase in consumption, to say nothing of the much lower price the consumer can buy goods compared to the last two years. We packed thirteen thousand cases of Sugar and Cream Corn. This is a new line for us and is as fine in quality as the name denotes. We expect with this 13,000 cases sprinkled between the two oceans to lay the foundation for a trade in this line that will take the entire capacity of one of our factories next year to cater to.

BUSINESS PERSONALS.

J. H. WILSON, Coldwater, Ont., has opened up new premises which are fitted up in a most advanced manner and make a very fine grocery store. Everything is new and up-to-date and Mr. Wilson naturally expects a large increase in his already extensive trade. The greater part of the Summer was spent in the erection of the store, to which he has now given the novel name of "Our House."

Howard Leslie, general merchant, Minnedosa, Man., has sustained loss by fire.

* * *

P. J. McDermott, general merchant, Minnedosa, Man., has sustained loss by fire.

Aaron Bennett, poultry and produce merchant, Lucknow, Ont., has been burnt out.

* * *

Wm. Shoemaker, manager for Armour & Co. in Canada, called on the Montreal trade this week.

* * *

Alice H. Leake, baker and confectioner, Toronto, Ont., has sustained loss to her business by fire.

* * *

L. Archambault, butter and cheese manufacturer, Grandimes, P.Q., was a visitor to Montreal this week.

* * *

D. J. Rattray, of D. J. Rattray & Sons, Montreal, was in Quebec last Saturday on a business trip.

* * *

J. A. Benoit has joined the traveling staff of S. H. Ewing & Sons, Montreal, covering the territory, Lake St. John district, Beauce county and New Brunswick.

The McGill street fruit jobbers this week were honored with calls from W. F. Cronemiller, president California Vegetable Union, Los Angeles, and Mr. Dietrichs, of the United Fruit Co., New York. G. G. Steel, the well-known fruit man of London, Ont., and Harry Moreland, of C. Moreland & Co., Ottawa, were also noted by The Grocer.

W. H. McFarlane, Paisley, Ont., one of the best known merchants of the Peninsular District of Western Ontario, was met at the Windsor in Montreal last week by The Grocer. Mr. McFarlane, who is also agent for the Canadian Pacific Railway and R. & O. Navigation Co., was on his way to Portland to attend the annual convention of passenger agents.

Messrs. S. H. Ewing & Sons, Montreal, agents for St. Charles Condensing Co., are in receipt of a letter from their principals under date of the 16th inst. advising that the St. Charles Cream had received a gold medal, the highest award given at the Lewis & Clark Exposition, Portland, Ore., thus adding another to the long list of highest awards which have been given to St. Charles Cream.

* * *

Jas. McGill, representing Messrs. J. & W. Kearney, importers of teas, Montreal, whom The Grocer met last week, reports a good business on "both sides of the line." Mr. McGill enjoys a good reputation as a tea and coffee salesman and his territory extends into the States of New York, New Hampshire and Vermont, as well as the Eastern Townships and part of the north shore of the St. Lawrence.

* * *

Walter Wilkins, representing B. O. Beland, Montreal, is making a trip through Ontario covering the Province as far as Windsor. Mr. Wilkins has had an extensive experience in the grocery, wine and spirit trade in England, and though but lately arrived in Canada is impressed with the trade of the country and promises to become an enthusiastic Canadian. Since his connection with B. O. Beland he has worked up a fine trade in the east and will no doubt give a good account of himself in the west.

* * *

R. L. Millward, Toronto representative of Sutcliffe & Bingham, Limited, Manchester, was a visitor in Montreal and Ottawa last week. Kkovah specialties are increasing in sale in the west and Mr. Millward reports prospects very bright. A new line just introduced on the Canadian market by Messrs. Millward & Bradwell, the Canadian agents for Sutcliffe & Bingham, are the Kkovah Fruit Wines, in decanters. This line is a British non-alcoholic preparation of natural fruit juices, and the price at which it can be retailed should make it a good line for grocers to stock.

AT NIGHT

When your store is closed compute a bit and see if you are saving or losing by the absence of on your shelves. Think over the names of some of your customers, the multiplicity of tastes represented, and if there is'nt room for sales with biscuits like then there is'nt reason for their being made, rather strange in view of the fact that the larger percentage of grocers carry them. We are willing to wait a while for you, but don't you think you ought to order To-day?

Food for Reflection

This announcement can be read in about one minute, but there is enough food for reflection in it to last for many a day.

ORANGE MEAT

is no experiment but the prime favorite with cereal users the country over. It has been selling at a great rate. It is going to sell at a greater rate as time goes on. ORANGE MEAT being advertised throughout the Dominion, the grocer who is not equipped with it will be out of the race. People who want ORANGE MEAT—and they are many—will not go to one store to get ORANGE MEAT and to another to get groceries. So the grocer who keeps ORANGE MEAT will get the grocery order. ORANGE MEAT is put up on the square deal plan — always full weight, always best quality. The Mercerized Bags keep the food fresh and clean; the coupons in the 15c. packages and the price of the Jumbo package bring trade.

FLOUR AND CEREAL FOODS

A REASONABLE SUGGESTION.

NOW is the time for the up to date grocer to make the best of his cereal opportunity. Summer can now be said to have passed, and the Winter season is rapidly coming in upon us. With it will follow the usual introduction of the many cereal foods for family use. The good housewife knows that nothing forms a better foundation for her young and growing family to fortify against the increasing cold than a good breakfast of cereal food.

The enterprising storekeeper will acknowledge this and use it to advantage. The grocer should see to it that he has a fair stock of all the many popular foods with which to tempt the trade in these lines. A well displayed window with these seasonable goods would go a long way to the increase of this trade. Perhaps nothing lends itself so readily to window display as the many artistic and tasty cartons in which many of these cereal foods are put up. Almost any scheme of display can be carried out and would form an immense attraction to the store. Any popular public building or structure can be copied, and with a nicely written notice, scarcely a passer-by would fail to be interested. For this purpose he need not purchase an extra stock of packet cereals, as almost any of the leading makers would readily supply him with empty cartons for the purpose. A little enterprise along these lines would go a long way towards exciting that interest in business which is at all times most desirable, and financially profitable.

OATS AND BARLEY IN N. W.

In Manitoba it is satisfactory to note the great improvement in oat cultivation since 1890, there being then only 235,534 acres of this grain, producing 9,513,000 bushels. In 1895, this had increased to 482,658 acres and 22,555,000 bushels. During the following nine years the increase was very noticeable. In 1904 the area was 943,574, with a yield of 36,289,979 bushels. Barley has shown even a greater improvement in the same period. In 1890, the acreage was 66,000 and the yield 2,069,000 bushels. Five years later this had increased to 153,800 acres and 5,645,000 bushels, and in 1904, 361,000 acres were sown, producing the magnificent total of 11,177,000 bushels.

These two cereals, oats and barley, have received similar attention in the Territories. In 1898 there were 3,000,000 bushels of oats produced from 105,000 acres, and in 1904 the yield was 16,032,000 bushels from 523,634 acres. There were only 17,092 acres, producing 449,512 bushels of barley in 1898, while last year 86,154 acres were responsible for 2,205,000 bushels.

* * *

The foregoing figures demonstrate how the agricultural part of Canada has progressed, but we have still much to do before being placed in company with such wheat producing countries as the United States, France, Russia and India, the combined wheat production of these four countries being about seventeen thousand million bushels, or more than one-half the total wheat production of the world.

CANADA SUPERIOR.

Canadian crop yields when compared with those of the United States and Great Britain make a favorable showing. For example, the wheat crop of the United States during the past ten years has averaged 13.53 bushels per acre. This includes all varieties of winter and spring wheats. For the same period in Ontario winter wheat has averaged 21.52 bushels, and spring wheat 16.64 bushels per acre. In Manitoba the average for the past ten years has been over 20 bushels per acre. The comparison is even more interesting when the records of the northern States are examined. The average yield per acre of wheat for the past decade in Minnesota has been 14.33 bushels; in South Dakota, 10.67 bushels, and in North Dakota, 12.87 bushels. Is it any wonder that thousands of farmers are leaving these States and taking up land in the great Canadian west? Three reasons are suggested for the better Canadian yields:

(1). A more favorable climate.
(2). Greater soil fertility.
(3). Better methods of farming.

It is a matter for congratulation also that the average yield per acre of wheat, oats and barley grown in Ontario is not very far behind that of Great Britain.

Read Between the Lines of Smoke

Old Jack Tar enters your store in quest of groceries and keeps puffing away at the stump of a clay pipe while waiting to be served. Presently he brings out a package from his pocket and re-fills the pipe. On the package you can plainly see two letters—

T & B

The old fellow called at another grocery store, on the way down to your store, and got the tobacco. He didn't like the fellow or his groceries. He came for your goods. If you had sold tobacco you would have received that order, too. The old fellow bought from a grocer he didn't "like" because he couldn't buy from a grocer who didn't "keep." Read between the lines of smoke that many a Jack Tar floats into your store unknown to you (because they don't all smoke in public) and that the history of Lost Opportunity goes on repeating itself. Some day you will see the folly of missing T & B trade.

TOBACCOS, CIGARS AND ACCESSORIES

SMOKING RECORDS.

BERLIN has recently lost one of her most ardent and methodical devotees of the fragrant weed by the death of Herr Grunn, whose daily allowance of tobacco consisted of six cigars, six pipes and six cigarettes. This amount he never varied, save on his birthday, when it was doubled, and on New Year's Day, which, on the principle of starting the year temperately, was kept as a day of total abstinence.

* * *

Love of tobacco and wisdom often go together. Prince Bismarck was wont to boast that he had in something like 50 years consumed 100,000 cigars, a number that works out an average of five a day—no great feat, perhaps, for one who was at one period a "chain" smoker, lighting each cigar from the glowing stump of the one just enjoyed.

* * *

Edison, the great inventor, must hold a superior record. Ten cigars a day are his normal allowance, but when deeply absorbed in work he finds double that number necessary to stimulate his brain. Even more in a day used that celebrated singer, Mario, to dispose of; but his day commenced with dawn and concluded not until, sleep overpowering him, the still burning Havana slipped from his lips.

* * *

Without a cigar was Edwin Booth, the tragedian, scarcely ever seen. Even while engaged in his professional duties his beloved weed was present in the wings, ready to be snatched from his dresser's hand for enjoyment during the sometimes exceedingly brief intervals between his exits and entrances. Twenty-five cigars a day were at one time his usual allowance—an allowance, however, not infrequently exceeded.

* * *

To revert to ordinary folk. By a steady average of fourteen cigars a day William Pattison, of Michigan, managed in twenty years to account for 100,000 excellent weeds, a number that drew upon him the expostulation of his friends, on the ground that such excess was prejudicial to long life; to which he opposed the fact that Goethe, though he drank 20,000 bottles of wine, lived to be 83. So he smoked on unconcernedly and died at the age of 89.

* * *

Three years since, at Vienna, there died in his seventy-third year an old man beside whose smoking record that of William Pattison appears quite insignificant. From his twenty-seventh year he kept an exact account of his consumption of beer and tobacco. In his fifty-fourth year he became a teetotaler, after having drunk 28,780 glasses of ale—a very moderate tally, working out at but three a day. But it is of his immoderate smoking, which he continued till his death, that we have to speak. In forty-five years he smoked no fewer than 628,713 cigars, or 13,971 a year, giving an average of thirty-eight a day. Out of this gigantic total 43,500 were given him at various times, leaving 585,213, which, although his Austrian devotee at the shrine of "My Lady Nicotine" never paid more than a penny for each one, cost nearly $12,500.

* * *

But even this marvelous record is broken by that of Mynherr Van Klaes, known by the nickname of the "King of the Smokers." He was 81 at the time of his decease, and sometimes smoked as much as ten pounds of tobacco in a week. How strong with him was the ruling passion in death was shown by his funeral. At his express desire he was placed in a coffin lined with the wood of old cigar boxes. At his feet were deposited a packet of "Caporal" and a bladder of fine Dutch golden leaf, while at his side were laid his favorite china-bowled pipe, box of matches, flint, steel and tinder. Around his grave was gathered a circle of Rotterdam smokers, each with his pipe, from which, at the words, "Ashes to ashes, dust to dust," he shook the ashes on to the coffin lid. To each of these mourners the deceased left ten pounds of tobacco and two pipes bearing his arms.

E. INDIAN TOBACCO.

IT is perhaps not very widely known that soil suitable to the growth of the finest tobacco is not by any means confined to the western hemisphere. Up till recent years the general opinion was that American tobacco and Cuban cigars were the "beau ideal" of the smoker, but the attention which has been turned to cultivating the "fragrant weed" in the fertile East Indies seems likely to modify this idea.

There are brands of cigars now being manufactured from East Indian leaf, which are quite equal to those made from the Cuban growth. The East Indies as far as tobacco is concerned are virgin soil to the cigar manufacturer, whereas the West Indian soil has been drawn upon for numbers of years and can only approach its original productiveness by frequent and copious manuring. The cost of production is naturally much heavier in Cuba and it seems likely that that production will be robbed of some of its popularity by its powerful rival, the East Indian cigar, which can be produced at a much lower cost and consequently can be placed on the market at a figure which will place it more within the reach of the "man in the street."

A Word to the Trade.

The beet crop is now coming in and we are getting busy in anticipation of a large demand for our

Extra Standard Granulated Sugar

Last season our supply—large though it was—fell short of the demand. To ensure prompt attention, therefore, order from your jobber early.

Remember, our sugar is a Canadian product. It's manufactured in Canada from raw material grown in Canada, and it isn't surpassed for purity by any sugar—cane or beet—on the market. We shall have more to say on this subject. Look for our ad. each week.

WILSON WAYS

5. GOOD FOR GROCERS

People are getting more convinced every day that pure fruit vinegars are the only vinegars proper for human beings to use. So the trade of is growing and will continue to grow. There is a tone of reliability given to the store that carries the purest of vinegars, and when the reliability is backed up with dollar returns why should any grocer not say, "Golden Russet for me?" The Wilson Ways are honest, hence the triumph. Order "Golden Russet Vinegar" always.

Quaker Canned Goods

We finished packing Corn on the 6th this month and Tomatoes on the 13th. Taking the season altogether it has been the most favorable for quality we have ever experienced, the weather being about perfect all through the season for maturing vegetables in splendid condition. This applies to all lines, commencing with Peas and running right along into Beans, Corn and Tomatoes. With the fine quality of canned goods this season and the moderate prices there should be an enormous increase in the sales over previous years. While the pack has been large it does not exceed in our estimation the pack of two years ago in any line. Of course, we cannot speak for the whole country, but we know this applies to our pack. Judging from this we believe every case of Corn, Tomatoes, Peas and Beans packed will go into consumption before new goods come on the market next year. The fine quality of the goods alone this year over previous years should make an enormous increase in consumption, to say nothing of the much lower price the consumer can buy goods compared to the last two years. We packed thirteen thousand cases of Sugar and Cream Corn. This is a new line for us and is as fine in quality as the name denotes. We expect with this 13,000 cases sprinkled between the two oceans to lay the foundation for a trade in this line that will take the entire capacity of one of our factories next year to cater to.

THE PACKERS OF QUAKER CANNED GOODS

You may not know that JAPAN TEAS are intrinsically the most satisfactory and valuable for you to handle. They Cost Less Than Nothing Literally, ALLISON COUPON BOOKS cost less than nothing. By using them a mistake is impossible, thus saving many times what we charge for them. Hence, by absolutely saving a great deal more than you pay for them, they not only cost less than nothing, but you receive a great, big premium with every book you buy.

IF A MAN WANTS CREDIT

for $10, give him a $10 Allison Coupon Book, charge him with $10, and there you are. No trouble at all. If he buys a plug of tobacco for ten cents, just tear off a ten-cent coupon—that's all. And so on for all his purchases up to limit of the book. NO PASS BOOK. NO WRITING. NO TIME LOST. NO KICKING. There are other Coupon Books, of course, but why not have the best? SHIPPING FRUIT FROM EAST TO WEST

Some Interesting Pointers.

THE following particulars are extremely interesting and instructive. If Ontario fruit growers are to obtain full benefits of the large and increasing market which is opening up in the west, it can only be by putting into practice the lessons to be learned by the experiments in packing, shipping and selling herein referred to.

The fruit growers of Niagara district decided that during the fruit shipping season of 1905, a number of shipments of mixed fruits—such as apples, pears, plums, peaches, grapes, and tomatoes—should be made to Winnipeg, shipping about two carloads per week, commencing about August 15th.

It was further decided that three special shipments should be made, a man accompanying each car, noting the facilities afforded to shipments of fruit by the different transportation companies, as to matters of despatch, icing while in transit, etc., and also to report the condition of fruit and all matters of interest to fruit growers or shippers.

Despatch.

A car left St. Catharines, 7.45 p.m., and proceeded to North Bay, at which place it arrived 5.45 a.m. Sunday (having left St. Catharines on Friday). Fresh icing taking place.

The car left North Bay at 2. p.m. Sunday, on fast freight. This fast freight was due in Fort William at 4.30 Tuesday morning, but arrived there at 7.50 a.m. Here the car was again iced.

A car which was loaded at St. Catharines on the 5th—three days earlier than the one in question—only reached Winnipeg one day earlier, and was sold the same day. The one preceding that was 8 days on the road.

All this goes to show that with a reasonable effort on the part of the railway company cars of fruit can be laid down at Winnipeg from points in Ontario in five days, under ordinary conditions, instead of the 8, 9, and sometimes more, days which are often consumed in accomplishing the same delivery.

The relative rate of despatch between St. Catharines and Winnipeg of the car in question is as follows: From St. Catharines to North Bay, 34 hours, or a little less than 9 miles an hour. From North Bay to Winnipeg, 72 hours, or about 15 miles an hour.

If a car of fruit does not arrive at North Bay in time to be iced, and placed on the fast freight which leaves for Fort William and Winnipeg at 2 p.m. each day, it will remain there until same hour next day. Taking this fact, together with the slow rate of despatch from the point of shipment to North Bay, it will account for 1 to 2 days of the excessive time consumed in transit.

The time consumed in shipment to Winnipeg or west should not vary 3 or 4 days. Certain fruit at a certain stage of ripeness, may be fair to good value; add but one day to its life and it may be almost worthless, to say nothing of three or four days, hence the great importance of despatch in special fruit shipments.

Conditions of Fruit and Marketing.

The car was placed at the Ottawa Fruit Exchange Warerooms, Winnipeg, during the night of the 13th, and opened next morning. The fruit was in good condition generally. Owing to a dull market it was decided to sell only the ripest fruit and leave balance, which was disposed of the following day. Owing to the large quantities of tomatoes shipped in from all sides, the demand for that commodity ruled very weak. Ripe lots sold fairly well, but half ripe or green were not wanted. Unfortunately a large percentage of tomatoes in car were shipped quite green, growers expecting that ripening and coloring would take place during transit, but this was not the case, however, as many opened up almost as green as at points of shipment. Green tomatoes will not command the highest price. Dealers say that there is danger of green tomatoes decaying rather than ripening.

Pears.

Pears in baskets showed ripeness, but sold readily at fair prices, while those in bushel boxes were more firm and commanded even better prices. The boxes referred to are the apple box size.

There is no question about the desirability of wrapping in paper. In every case wrapped fruit turns out in better condition generally.

As to the proper stage of maturity of fruit, while some lots that showed signs of ripeness at point of shipment arrived in a firm condition, this cannot be said to be the case generally. It is not advisable in long distance shipments to ship pears that show signs of ripeness. Dealers who pay high prices for such fruit want a reasonable time to turn over the goods at a profit. They will not take chances on fruit that is already ripe, but want something firm that will stand up for a few days at least.

Peaches.

The peaches arrived in fine condition, the fruit was fairly attractive, although small, on account of being picked immature. While the west is not the best market for Ontario peaches, there is no reason why large quantities cannot be marketed there with profit, providing that growers exercise care in selecting and packing.

Grapes.

The grapes in car were mostly "Moore's Early" and sold fairly well, although showing signs of ripeness. In most of the baskets shelling had taken place, leaving the stems in view. This shelling is from two causes, over-ripeness and improper packing. Where grapes are loose in the basket the motion of the car will shake the fruit from the stems, which has a very damaging effect in the appearance. For long shipments grapes should be picked on green side.

Apples.

The car contained but few apples, and as the quality of apples around St. Catharines was poor generally this season, this fruit had but little to recommend it. Prices ruled only fair. Where fruit was of good quality, packing properly done, good paying prices were realized.

Loading.

The loading of the cars in question was not an easy task, on account of the many different styles and sizes of packages. Cross-walls were erected, but in two instances were broken down. In both cases this was caused by shunting in the yard in Winnipeg. Cross-walls are to be recommended and must be strongly built. If, however, the car is filled level and solidly through with one style of package, cross-walls may be dispensed with, but even in this case they help to prevent swaying of the packages, caused by the constant motion of the car. This often does much damage to fruit in weak packages, especially where heavy loading is practised. Decking cars for basket fruit strikes one favorably. The additional expense will be more than met by the improved condition in which the fruit will last; dividing the weight and affording better ventilation are two important conditions.

Many of the refrigerator cars now in use have only the smooth surface floors. I would highly recommend the slatted bottom for two reasons: First, as a better means of ventilation; and, second, to protect the lower tier of packages from water and dampness, often caused by tanks overflowing. It is quite common for a lower tier of baskets to show mould and sometimes damaged fruit, from above causes. Where the car floors are covered with narrow strips, cross floors should be used, without which the lower tier of baskets are sure to be damaged. The common half-inch lumber will serve for this purpose.

General Observations.

While the packing of the fruit in the shipment in question was fairly well done, this cannot be said of the general pack from Ontario.

From close observation and watching sales at the different warehouses in Winnipeg, there are what the fruit grower would consider two good profits in the difference of prices obtained for fruit packed freshly and tightly, showing a plump and attractive appearance, and that put up in a loose and slovenly manner in unattractive packages. The latter do not come into competition, only between the poor class dealers, and Ontario growers who will persist in putting their fruit on the market in this condition must be satisfied to remain amongst the poor class growers.

Surely this fact is well worth turning over in the minds of growers. Attention was drawn to two lots of apples in boxes sold by auction. The first realized 50 per cent. more than the second and was packed in tiers, California style: fruit of uniform size tightly packed. The other lot was of what is known as "rough pack" and not tiered. When the cover was removed the face apples had fallen in and were displaced. No doubt these two lots were practically of the same value when on the trees, and the failure of one lot to realize as much as the other was entirely due to the packing.

Branding and Stencilling.

Attention of shippers should be called to the desirability of having all packages neatly branded and stencilled. A car of apples in barrels shipped by growers in Brockville district, had the markings on barrels entirely in lead pencil. While the fruit was of fair quality the neglect to brand and stencil neatly cost the farmer 50 cents per barrel. Dealers view with suspicion packages so marked and often pass by fruit of fine quality on this account.

The Box as a Package.

The box as a package for apples is slowly but surely coming into general use. The principal reason for its not growing in favor more rapidly is the fact that the packing has been very faulty in Ontario box shipments so far, both to the western and European markets.

It is to be hoped that the efforts of the fruit division in employing Mr. B. T. Boies, of Vernon, B.C., to give practical demonstrations of box packing will do much toward bringing the box to the front as a package. From experience and observation there is no hesitation in saying that the box is the only fit package for early fruit shipment and the best one for fancy fruit. One shipper to the west received nothing for the fruit, and only 10c. each for his barrels. This was caused by the heating of the fruit in the barrels. If this same fruit had been put in boxes and properly cooled, it would have been landed in fine condition.

The West as a Market.

Shipping fruit to the Northwest is now well past the experimental stage, and Ontario shippers and growers can safely regard this as a great market for fruit of all kinds. The western dealers say in substance: We have no No. 2 trade here; our people are all wealthy. Send us good fruit honestly and well packed, and we will give you in return good paying prices.

The present season a number of shipments of Ontario fruit have found their way to new markets, and this will go on increasing as the transportation facilities improve, until in a few years hundreds of cars will be shipped direct from the Ontario orchards to the consumers, instead of as in the past having to be re-shipped from Winnipeg. This involves extra handling of fruit and extra time in landing shipments at their destination, as well as increasing prices.

Under such circumstances dealers were often compelled to pay extremely high prices for damaged fruit. From all this it can be readily seen that there is a general improvement in sight, and the Ontario fruit growers will do well to meet the situation and take advantage of what I consider the great possibilities by first caring for their orchards so that a higher class article can be produced, and then put on the market honestly and well packed, in neat and attractive packages. There are now new conditions and new methods should be adopted, and the cheap disreputable practices so generally in evidence in past year shipments must be discarded.

NOTES WORTH NOTING.

There has never been a season in the history of the industry in which the farmers of Canada have been able to get such a high average price for cheese and butter.

* * *

The total number of packages of butter purchased were 701,803, at an average price of 21½ cents a pound, or $12 a package, making a total value of $8,412,000.

* * *

Lord Strathcona, writing to the Central Chamber of Agriculture in reference to the butter bill, said that the Dominion Government feel that the provisions of the bill if adopted would be greatly in the interest of the Canadian butter trade, and they would regard the passage of the bill into a law with much satisfaction.

* * *

Canada is likely to have another new and important industry at a very early date. A meeting of capitalists, some of whom are British, was held at the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, a few days ago and a decision arrived at to form a company for the manufacture of soda ash and several kindred and similar products. At present about $4,000,000 worth of these products are imported, and as Canada possesses the two chief factors in their production, salt and lime, it is believed the articles can be successfully and economically manufactured here.

A shortage in the egg supply loomed above the horizon some weeks ago in Vancouver, B.C., and as a result the price went up to 50 cents per dozen. This is the usual thing at this season of the year, and the only immediate result was the putting of his hands further down in his pockets by the purchaser.

But even at 50 cents the hens refused to do their duty and a practical famine prevails. Dealers in the heart of the city report no fresh eggs at all, and those on the outskirts report the supply to be very small and extremely fluctuating. Eastern eggs are in fair supply and sell at from 30 to 35 cents per dozen.

Prof. Ruddick, Dominion Dairy Commissioner, paid a visit to Brockville last week. He said that the Government cheese cool curing stations may or may not be continued, as they have about filled their mission.

"The great drawback we have now to contend with," said Mr. Ruddick, "is the standard of the factories. The makers are, for the most part, very bright, intelligent men, and have assimilated the pointers given by instructors and to-day they are superior to their equipment. The equipment is gradually being improved, but in many cases the milk producers are not getting the results they might and it would pay them to pull down the old factories and erect new ones with all the modern facilities and conditions for producing the best article of cheese.

Erie Flour Mills and the company will be reorganized. John Campbell, who established the mills and has managed them for the past 23 years, will shortly retire from their active management. Asked as to his plans for the future, Mr. Campbell had nothing to say but that he was tired of business. The new president and manager will be selected at a meeting of the board of directors to be held later.

THE G.T.R. AND ONTARIO MILLERS

THE failure of the Grand Trunk Railway to meet the requirements of the grain situation has wide-reaching effects. While the loss to owners of lake vessels by delay in discharge is one of the large factors, the loss to small millers in Ontario is probably one of the most severe results.

To a miller whose operations are on a small scale the loss of even a day's operations is an important factor in the year's result, but when he is forced to leave his mill idle for weeks, the whole profit on the year's operations may be jeopardized.

The Railway Commission has ordered its expert to inquire into the charges of discrimination in car supply between exporters and millers, and no doubt justice will be done as betwwen these parties some time, but will that time not be too late in many cases? While it may be the duty of the commission to hold the balance even, it would appear that there are reasons for exceptional favors to some Ontario millers.

For instance, cases are cited by grain dealers, and will probably be investigated by the Commission, in which millers with orders for flour for the Georgian Bay have for a month been unable to secure delivery of the grain needed. This flour is intended to supply a district which must get in its Winter supplies before navigation closes. Surely this case requires exceptional and immediate inquiry, and, if correctly stated, immediate relief.

The situation seems, too, to offer room for independent inquiry by the commission. Rightly or wrongly, the feeling exists in the Province that it is injudicious for individual millers or grain dealers to make complaints against the company, that by coming out openly in complaint a miller or shipper puts himself under the ban of the company's officials, and can expect at the best nothing more than ordinary treatment in the way of car supplies. When ordinary treatment means the delay it involves to-day, it is not unnatural that these individuals hesitate to state their complaints openly. Under ordinary treatment the company's officials seem able to find innumerable excuses for non-supply of cars, and these individual shippers hesitate to incur the risk of finding the supply still further reduced by additional excuses inspired by a feeling of antipathy.—Toronto Globe.

MR. MARSHALL'S NEW POSITION.

MR. C. L. MARSHALL has assumed the management of the agency department of the A. F. MacLaren Imperial Cheese Company. Both Mr. Marshall and the Imperial Cheese Company are to be congratulated. Mr. Marshall has had an extensive experience in the wholesale grocery business and his ability is widely recognized. He was for thirteen years in charge of the sample room of Warren Bros. & Co., Toronto, and during the last eighteen months was buyer for the Western Brokerage Company. His connection with the latter company brought him into touch with shippers the world over. This experience will naturally be valuable in his new capacity.

The appointment of Mr. Marshall to the agency branch of the MacLaren Imperial Cheese Co. was necessitated by the rapid growth of the agency business of that company. The president and general manager of the company is Mr. Henry Wright, who is one of the most energetic and aggressive men in the grocery and allied trades to-day.

The organization of the company is so complete that any article can be easily and effectually placed on the market.

PROGRESSIVE RETAILING.

THE COUNTRY STOREKEEPER AND COLLECTIONS.

THE successful country merchant is invariably a man who gives close attention to the collection of his accounts; and the country merchant who cannot meet his obligations is mostly always a fellow who has so many other things to look after, he neglects the all important branch of his business—the collections.

* * *

The ambitious merchant is anxious to carry on a large business, and studies the best means of securing a large patronage.

* * *

The live merchant is a hustling fellow, who prides himself on being able to attend to the wants of four customers while his best clerk is waiting on only one.

* * *

The shrewd merchant is a person who buys flour a little less than the fellow across the way, and can always easily satisfy the most fault-finding patron.

* * *

The dickering merchant is a chap who knows the value of a colt, a beef critter or load of hay, and knows how and where to turn either to a customer at a neat profit.

* * *

And the lazy merchant is one who will always interest a customer with a story of the latest gossip about the Corners, but never has time to "post up" his books, so a customer can settle an account, until the customer makes several attempts to "pay his store bill."

* * *

All these merchants have ability, and as a rule are good, keen, sound business men, and while some are really hustlers, they nearly all neglect that essential department—the collections.

* * *

The country merchant is usually a man who represents many characters, serves in different spheres of life, and represents many more different persons. To his customers he must be provider, legal adviser, banker, guardian, friend and benefactor. His customer wants provisions and dress; he must be ready to supply those wants. The customer is having property troubles, and he naturally goes to the merchant for an opinion on the proper course to pursue in preference to consulting a lawyer.

* * *

Another has come into the possession of a little larger amount of money than he usually has on hand, and he makes the merchant's safe his depository instead of leaving it at a bank. A day laborer who is offered work by different concerns will seek the suggestion of the merchant as to which concern it is advisable to sell his labor. A customer is in need of a few dollars in cash until "pay day," and he solicits the friendship of the merchant for an accommodation. And the man who is out of employment and has a sick family on his hands will almost always depend on the benefaction of the merchant to supply him with the necessaries of life to carry him through his misfortune.

* * *

The patronage of the poor man is just as desirable as that of the rich. He will pay, if his mind is kept on the account. The poor man will get in debt and frequently is unable to pay, but then it is not always his own fault. Because a man owes a debt and cannot pay it is not a sign that he is dishonest. A debtor is not a scoundrel because he cannot pay.

* * *

The average man is honest, and the average man who gets trusted at a country store, at the time he procures the credit intends to pay. He may not do so, but then it is because the merchant allowed him to run up so large an account that the poor man cannot get enough ahead to pay. The merchant is really the one that is to blame for this condition of affairs, because he has allowed him to live beyond his means. The customer earns and has enough income to pay current ordinary living expenses, but can spare nothing to pay on an old account. The average laboring man is honest, abhors a debt, does not mean to live beyond his wages, but is heedless, thoughtless and is a fellow that needs a guard on his account.

Then is the time the merchant is a guardian; he should watch the account and caution the man to not allow the account to exceed the amount of his monthly wages. A customer is always surprised at the amount of his store bill, until he looks over it item by item, and will then feel that he has been imprudent and bought too freely. Is there any reason why so many merchants that seem to have a large and prosperous trade are forced out of business? Yes, they do not watch their accounts, and neglect the collections.

THE PEANUT HARVEST.

PEANUTS are harvested this month. When it is remembered that Americans consume annually more than six million bushels of peanuts grown in Virginia and other Southern States, at a cost of more than $14,000,000, it is not to be wondered that a short crop has caused the producers to demand a high price.

* * *

In suitable soil the peanut will grow in any latitude where Indian corn will thrive, but a good crop depends entirely on the climate. It has been found that where the land is properly prepared there is little to be done in the way of cultivation after the seeds are placed in the ground.

* * *

It is always a nip and tuck race with Jack Frost to get the crop harvested before he shows his work, for a biting frost injures the nut and lessens the value of the vines for forage purposes. Plows are made for harvesting the crop. The plow is long and keen and goes deep into the soil, thus preventing the bruising of the nuts. As the plowman loosens the vines from their beds laborers with pitchforks follow him and remove the vines from the earth, shake off the loose soil and pile the vines with their roots laden with nuts in great piles.

These workers are followed by others, who take the nut laden vines and shock them around seven foot poles. When the shock is finished it is capped to keep out the rain, and the shock is left undisturbed until ready for the pickers, who are generally women and children and are paid so much per bushel.

The picking of the nuts is slow and tedious work and one of the largest items of expense to the grower. Some planters have invested in threshing machines, but nuts picked this way are not as marketable as the hand picked, the machine cracking and breaking the hulls.

* * *

In former years most planters had the nuts cleaned before sending to market, but since the establishment of peanut factories the nuts are brought in just as they are picked from the vines. The factories, which are in fact recleaners and graders, buy the output of the planters as farmers' stock, and after a treatment of cleaning, polishing and sorting by both hand and machinery the nut is ready for the consumer.

* * *

The factories are four story buildings, but the machinery is neither costly nor complicated, consisting of fans, brushes, polishers, sifters and separators. As the great load of nuts are brought to the factory they are sacked and carried to the top floor by elevators, where the nuts are dumped in large hoppers. Then they pass into large cylinders on the next floor, where they are cleaned by attrition, fans taking out the dust as they pass around the cylinders. From this floor the nuts pass on to tables on endless movable belts. At these tables the hundreds of negro women and children pick out the discolored and faulty nuts and allow the better ones to pass on into a grader which grades the nuts as to size.

Through all this machinery the nuts have been polished until they come out looking as clean and polished as a pearl. In this condition they are placed in chutes, running to the lower floor, where they are sacked in burlap bags which have been stencilled with the names of the several brands, and are ready to be shipped to the cities throughout the country.

* * *

Every year the crop is becoming more valuable, and while almost all Americans are peanut eaters, great inroads are being made on the crop by its utilization for other purposes. Millions of bushels are now being used in the Old World for the production of oil, which is regarded as fully equal to olive oil. The meal or cake, after the oil has been pressed out, is an excellent food for cattle.

* * *

At least three million dollars may be added to the value of the peanut crop as a direct benefit to the farmer, who turns his hogs into the fields as soon as the crop is harvested. The nuts left in the ground furnish sufficient food for almost the entire Winter. The razorbacks get down to business when they are hungry, and with their long snouts turn up the ground, finding the nuts where they had been pulled from the roots of the vines. The vines are carefully saved and cured, making excellent forage for all kinds of live stock.

PRODUCE AND PROVISIONS

CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN

Montreal, Nov. 9, 1905.

THE cheese market has recently developed unusual strength for this season of the year, just when it was natural to expect more reasonable prices for late October made goods. All the country markets advanced sharply and evidently there are to be no cheap cheese to be had this year.

It has repeatedly been pointed out in these articles that the situation on cheese is strong and healthy statistically and that prices must surely advance. This advance has come much sooner than generally expected, which simply bears out the assertion that available supplies are inadequate for the consumptive demand.

As soon as our markets commenced to show firmness and resisting a decline, orders commenced to come in from the United Kingdom almost on best terms, and the result was eager competition of buyers at country points at steadily and quickly advancing prices.

There are no reliable figures at hand to estimate the stocks or available supplies of cheese on either side of the Atlantic, but some large operators who should know something in this direction figure our shortage in Canada at about 200,000 boxes as compared with last year. This includes the much lighter holdings at country points, as owing to the high prices prevailing the cheese factories have shipped out their product much closer than probably ever before. Stocks as reported from the different centres in Great Britain also show a marked decline as compared with this time a year ago, and as trade conditions in the United Kingdom are favorable there is apparently no cloud in the horizon to cause any anxiety about a probability of declining prices.

It would probably have been better for the general trade had prices remained moderate on present offerings of late made goods. The effort was made by our merchants to bring prices down rather than to advance them, but the pressure of demand from British importers was so strong that this effort failed utterly, and now the holdings on this side of the Atlantic consist mostly of high priced goods for which a profit will be demanded by the holders unless the stocks should prove too large later on for the consumptive demand. From the foregoing remarks this does not seem probable and the future prospects are at present decidedly in favor of higher prices during the coming Winter months.

The different markets in the United States also report a considerable shortage in supplies and as their prices are a long way above the prices in Canada, the argument that they will have no goods to spare for export seems reasonable. Their home consumption is said to be able to absorb all their supplies and probably more, so that very much higher prices are probable in the United States before the new season of next year can open.

Mail advices just at hand from the different markets in Great Britain are still "bearish" in tone, yet within a few days after these reports were written the orders came in by cable at advancing prices, which shows how easily the British importers are influenced by advices from this side. They know they are in need of goods to supply their natural trade, and if they find that they will not be able to get their supplies any cheaper in the future, they will take them at best possible prices and take their chances on future profits.

There is likely to be a period of extreme dullness ahead of us, especially after the close of navigation, but when stocks in British markets commence to show a steady decline there will be renewed buying orders and then it will probably mean a further sharp advance in prices.

Butter has also had a sudden sharp advance in price lately. Quality is now less desirable for export purposes, but fresh made butter is in demand for our home consumption and as the season advances we are becoming more independent of the export demand. Australian butter is commencing to arrive in larger quantities in the British markets, which makes them more independent of Canadian butter, and as our stocks are very moderate we will have barely enough goods for our home consumption. The scarcest article on our markets is dairy butter. This scarcity has existed the whole season and prices have been forced up so high that there is not enough difference between ordinary dairy butter and finest creamery, yet the demand was for a lower priced article and arrivals of dairy butter were invariably sold out quickly at steadily advancing prices, so that now there is but very little left here and prices are largely nominal.

LONDON PRODUCE LETTER.

By Our Own Correspondent.

October 28, 1905.

Butter.

The position of the butter market, both as regards Canadian and other butters, is better than last week, and the demand for saltless and salted Canadian is reported steady. Arrivals are not plentiful, which has doubtless tended to push business along in some degree, and prices are unchanged at the figures last quoted. The domestic make is short.

Yesterday's reports (October 27) state that 22,800 boxes of butter and 8,000 cwts. of cheese left New Zealand for this market two or three days back.

Butter importers here are watching with some anxiety the course of events in Russia, for although Siberian butter is not arriving in quite such large quantities as usual at this time of the year, it is possible that the disastrous railway strike lately inaugurated amongst Russian railroad men will seriously impede if not entirely prevent the transport of Siberian butter through the western portions of Russia. Shortage of Siberian butter will, of course, have the effect of stiffening prices.

Arrivals of butter from all sources for the first three weeks of October show an increase of 11,096 cwts. over the corresponding period last year, and are as follows :

	Cwts.
Denmark	79,752
Canada	36,913
Russia	32,378
France	20,441
Australia	19,341
United States	14,095
Argentina	1,095

Bacon.

Business transacted during the past week has not been very heavy in volume, reports from some quarters being to the effect that there has been a decided lull. The shortage of supplies to which reference was made a week or two back, has of course had the effect of putting prices away up, and consumption is being curtailed considerably as a result. Reference is being made to Canadian bacon, price of which has within the past few days been within 2 to 4 shillings of finest Irish and Danish product. Prices must be expected to become lower each week as the year advances to its close, and it is hoped that packers will, in order to insure sales, do their best to lower the price of hogs.

Light weights in particular are very unpopular, and to quote from one who is in a position to speak with authority, "it is a wonder to merchants on this side why packers continue to purchase and ship these small unfinished pigs. If farmers would consult their own interests and feed these small pigs for a month or so longer, they would be producing a much more satisfactory article and improve the reputation of Canadian bacon."

Cheese.

There has been no great activity on the cheese market during the past few days. The demand has been fair to quiet at the quotations last given. Choicest September white is realizing 57 shillings and colored 58 shillings, with lesser grades two shillings below these figures.

Improved Storage Facilities for Canadian Produce.

Writing under date October 28th our special London correspondent gives the following important and instructive information regarding storage facilities.

"Reference has been made once or twice to the condition in which Canadian produce arrives on this market, and perhaps it would not be out of place to mention just here that within the past few months there have been great improvements completed, or nearly completed, for the reception and storage of Canadian butter and cheese, the good effects of which have already been very noticeable.

"This is due to the enterprise of the proprietors of the Surrey Commercial Docks.

"There has been a great deal of well-merited praise bestowed upon both Canadian cheese and Canadian butter on account of the improvement in its quality, and while this improvement has in great measure been due to the efforts of Canadian producers to turn out finer quality, there can be no doubt that the greater facilities afforded by the docks to which reference is made, have co-operated to further the interests of Canadian shippers and British importers.

"When the old methods were in vogue it was the custom for Canadian liners to unload at Tilbury, some twenty odd miles from the produce markets, and the produce was then transferred to freight cars and brought to Commercial Road, where it was put up in stores without any cold storage appliance until it was required. The time and labor expended on this change from steamer to rail was great, and naturally the quality of the goods was not improved by such unsatisfactory warehouses.

"Now, however, that is all changed. Instead of unloading at Tilbury, the Allan and Thompson liners, which carry the bulk of Canadian produce, come right up the Thames to accommodation afforded by the Surrey Docks, and unship their freight within two miles of Tooley street and Central Markets, the two great centres for produce in the metropolis. There is no longer any question of transfer to rail. Moreover, the Surrey Docks are complete with every modern convenience for the reception and storage of butter and cheese. If the produce is to be stored, it is placed in insulated chambers of correct temperature for the season. The chambers can be made warmer or colder at will. If it is desired to carry the produce away to the markets, there is every mechanical convenience for speedy and safe transport from ship or warehouse to the carts drawn up quite near. Within a very short while it has reached its destination."

PROVISION AND DAIRY MARKETS.

TORONTO.

THE demand for provisions continues good. Stocks are very short and arrivals are coming in equal only to the current demand, so that the possibility of any material fall in quotations is remote.

This week arrivals have been more plentiful, and condition reported as somewhat improved.

Long clear bacon is a little easier in price.

Barrel pork is also showing an easier tone than has been ruling of late.

Common beef is lower with still weakening tendency.

Dressed hogs are now arriving and are added to our quotations at $7.25.
